ıe feast of Passover was held at Sinai, but afterwards till the forty years had elapsed. In it could not be held whilst the nation, through elief and disobedience, was untrue to the cove. Had it not been distinctly affirmed, amid r provisions, that no uncircumcised person ld eat thereof? How, then, was it possible it should be maintained, when, as we have y learnt, "all the people that were born in the erness, by the way as they came forth out of pt, they had not circumcised"? But directly ɔircumcising of the people was completed, there no longer a barrier, and they kept the Passover een "the two evenings," as the sun of the ɛenth day of the month was flinging towards ɪ long shadows from the palm trees and walls ɛricho.

ıere were two significant parts of the Passover was first instituted. The sprinkling of blood the doors without; and within, the family ered around the roasted lamb, and eating it in ɛ. But as years went on and conditions altered, l was no longer sprinkled on the lintel and posts, but the drinking of wine was substituted hat ancient and significant act. And the family ered around the table to the sacred feast, not merely with girded loins and staff in hand as befitted pilgrims, but with the leisured restfulness of home. In point of fact it was a family meal at which the people reviewed the past with thankfulness, and talked together of that mercy which had been so remarkably displayed in their national history. On reaching the Land of Promise the thoughts of the people were guided back to the great fact of redemption by blood that lay at the basis of their existence. And there can never be a moment in the experience of the believer when he can be forgetful of the broken body and the shed blood of his Lord, broken and shed for the remission of sin. However much the cross may speak of sanctification, its primary message must ever be of justification. It is true that we died with Him, but it is also true that He died for us, that He was made a curse to bring us blessings, and bare our sins in his own body on the tree. In heaven itself they sing of the Lamb who was slain, and amid the raptures of the Golden City adore Him who wrought redemption by his blood.

But the other side of the Passover also has a counterpart in our experience. The Israelites feasted, they drank the light Eastern wine, and in after days chanted the Hallel, and ate of the flesh of the Lamb. The bread was unleavened, and the herbs bitter, but joy preponderated over sorrow. And this is the type of Christian life. "Christ our Passover hath been sacrificed for us," said the apostle, "wherefore let us keep festival." (R.V.) He did not refer to any hour or day in the year, when those to whom he wrote should give themselves up to joy; but meant us to consider that the Jewish feast as lengthened through all the days of our life, so that we are always standing with girded loins, always in the pilgrim attitude, and always feeding on the Lamb of God.

The Lord's Supper is not simply a memorial of what He did on Calvary, or is doing on the throne, it is a perpetual reminder to the believing heart of its privilege and duty to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man. We must eat his flesh or we shall have no life in us. We must drink his blood or we shall not dwell in Him, or He in us.

How little we understand the way by which each part of our body takes the particular nourishment it requires from the food we eat. But we know that such is the case, and that bones, muscles, and tissues appropriate their sustenance from the common store. So though we may not be able to explain the philosophy of the process, we believe and are sure, that as we hold fellowship with Jesus in quiet hallowed moments, our weakness absorbs his strength, out impatience his long-suffering, our restlessness his calm, our ignorance his wisdom. "He is made to us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." His flesh is "true meat" because it makes us strong to endure and do. His blood is "true drink," because it satisfies our thirst, and makes glad our heart.

But let it ever be borne in mind that as no uncircumcised person was permitted to partake of the Passover, so none who are living in wilful sin can feed on the flesh and blood which were given for the life of the world. There must be a Gilgal before there can be a Passover in the deepest and fullest sense. This is why you have no zest in prayer, no appetite for your Bible, no enjoyment in the ordinances of the House of God. You have not yet put away all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, you have not yet submitted yourself to the sharp two-edged sword, you have not yet been delivered from the reproach of Egypt, you have not yet purged out the leaven of insincerity and falsehood.

II. ʜᴇ Corn of the Land.—"And they did eat of the corn of the land on the morrow after the Passover." There is no need for the adjective old. It would be sufficient to say that they ate of the corn of the land, though it is quite likely that it was the corn of the previous harvest, and not that which was then goldening throughout the land of Canaan, and ready for the sickle. The main point is, that, with great thankfulness, the Israelites, the majority of whom had never tasted anything but manna, ate of the produce of the Land of Promise.

According to the Jewish code, on that day the High Priest should have waved the first sheaf of the new harvest before God, so presenting the whole. The rite may have been omitted on that occasion, though religiously observed in after years. Is it not significant that on this very day the Lord Jesus arose from the dead, "the first-fruits of them that slept"? Surely, then, it is no straining of the parallel to say that the corn of the Land of Promise represents Him in risen glory. He fell as a seed of corn into the ground to die, but through death He has acquired the power of imparting Himself to all who believe. He was bruised, as all bread corn must be; the wheel of the cart of Divine justice ground Him beneath its weight; but He has become thereby as the finest of the wheat to feed the needs of the world.

We must feed on the Paschal Lamb, and learn the full meaning of his Cross and Passion, his precious Death and Burial; but we must also feed on the corn of the Heavenly Land and derive life and blessing from his glorious Resurrection and Ascension.

The Church has in some measure learnt to appreciate the importance of the Incarnation and Crucifixion. The picture galleries of the world teem with masterpieces representing the holy Nativity and the wondrous Cross. But it is comparatively seldom that we hear in treatise or sermon any adequate treatment of the Ascension from the lowest parts of the earth to that zenith point of glory from which He fills all things. The Resurrection is emphasised as the sign of his Sonship, and the evidence of his accepted work, but its full significance as the first step in the upward passage of the Son of God, bearing us with Himself from glory to glory until we sat down with Him in the Heavenlies, is too little appreciated. Oh to know what Paul meant by his emphasis when he cried, "yea rather that is risen again"; and to fathom his thought when he said, that though he had known Christ after the flesh, he wished to know Him so no more, because he longed to understand the power of his resurrection. The Paschal Lamb is good, but the corn of the land includes the fruits, and honey, and bread-stuffs that grow on the soil of the Resurrection-life.

The ascension of Christ may be considered in many aspects, but in each we seem to stand beneath his outstretched hands of benediction, as they did who saw Him parted from them, and taken up before their adoring gaze. The majesty and triumph of the God-man, as He is raised far above all principality and power, whether of angels or of demons, and above every name that is named, whether in this world or that which is to come; the certainty that the same power which raised Him from the grave to the right hand of the Father waits to do as much for each of us; the belief that in his ascension He has received gifts for each of us, and the best of all gifts, the fulness of the Spirit, waiting for us to claim and receive; the conception that, however our emotions may change, we are one with Him, accepted and beloved—these are themes that stir our sluggish hearts and make them leap with gladness, which no increase of corn or wine can yield to the men of this world. Happy indeed are they who also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell. To do this is to eat of the corn and fruit of the land.

III. ʜᴇ Manna.—"And the manna ceased on the morrow, after they had eaten of the old corn of the land." There was no break between the two. The corn began before the manna ceased. The one overlapped the other as the thatch of a hay-rick or the feathers of a bird.

God does not wish that there should be those intervals of apparent desertion, and the failure of supplies of which so many complain. It is quite likely that He may have to withdraw the extra ordinary and exceptional, as represented by the manna; but He will wait until we have become accustomed to the ordinary and regular supplies of his grace, as represented by the corn. In the blessings of our outward life, He does sometimes humble us, and suffer us to hunger. The brook Cherith dries before He sends us to Zarephath. But as to the inward life, He gives without stint. The table is always prepared before us in the presence of our enemies—one form of soul-sustenance is within reach before another form fails; we must have learned to feed ourselves with strong meat before he drops the spoon with which He had been wont to nourish us with milk.

We are constantly being forced from the familiar manna which came without anxiety or seeking on our part, to the corn which requires foresight and careful preparation. This is needful, because in these we learn invaluable lessons of patience, and self-denial, and co-operation with God. But ah! how at first we shrink from the change. Who is there that does not cry, "The old is better"? The old furniture for the room; the old house where we spent so many happy days; the old familiar routine of life; the old ways of doing things. It is hard to part with them. But they have ceased to furnish the discipline we need, and we must leave them for the untried and unknown, where we obtain a new insight into the ways of God, and become workers together with Him.

How gracious then is the gentle, thoughtful kindness of God, who lets us see the new before He quite takes away the old, accustoming us to walk before He removes the chair on which we had leant so long, careful that we should be able to swim before He removes the cork. Do not fret if the rhapsodies, and outbursts, and exuberant manifestations of earlier days have ceased; it is better to live by the ordinary laws of human life than by the abnormal and miraculous. And after all there is as much Divine power in the production of a fig and pomegranate, of oil-olive and honey, of barley and wheat, as in the descending manna; as much in the transformation of the moisture of earth and air into the ruddy grape as in the miracle of Cana; as much in the maintenance of the soul in holiness and righteousness all its days as in the communication of unspeakable visions and words that may not be uttered.

But in addition to all these lessons, we may learn from the cessation of the manna that as we advance in Christian experience we think less of the coming down from Heaven in the Incarnation, and more of the going back in the Ascension. The Babe Jesus is less to us than the Ascended Christ. We look not so much towards the cradle of the manger-bed, as upwards to the throne and forwards to the Second Advent. It makes a great difference to us whether we occupy the standpoint of the Birth or of the Ascension, and many a system of theology, when weighed in the balance is found wanting, because it fails to understand that the manna ceases when the Jordan is crossed and Canaan entered.

This, then, is our main lesson. We must learn to live in such wise as to be nourished with the life of the Son of God. After all, it is not we who carry burdens, or walk long distances, or bear fatigue, it is the life of nature which has passed into us in the bread that we have eaten; just as the sun toils for us in our factories and warms us in our grates, by the coal to which his rays were imparted in the long past. So when we eat of Christ, we live by Him, as He lived by the Father; and as the Father, dwelling in Him, wrought through his life, and did his wondrous works, so He, entering into us, the Word by his words, will do through us what had otherwise been perfectly impossible. All things are possible to him that believeth, because he receives into his heart Him to whom all power is given in Heaven and on earth.

Let us then feed on Christ, meditating on his word, communing with Himself, filled by his Spirit, who shall take of the things that are his and reveal them to us. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst, they shall be filled." "He hath filled the hungry with good things."

SYRIA AND THE HOLY LAND.—A party of Christian Syrians are now in this country preparing to give an interesting and instructive exhibition of native manufactures, curiosities, and costumes, illustrating Eastern social life from the cradle to the grave. Any of our readers desiring to engage the services of these friends should communicate with Mr. R. Webb, 4, St. Aubyn's-road, Upper Norwood, S.E.

MR. FEGAN'S HOMES.—The annual sale of useful and fancy articles is announced for Tuesday and Wednesday, December 13 and 14, from two to seven each day. Mr. Fegan invites all interested in the work to come and see the home on these days. The boys can be seen at dinner at two, at school at 4.30, at tea at 6.30, and at work throughout the afternoon. The home (95, Southwark-street) is between Blackfriars and Southwark bridges on the Surrey side of the Thames.

REV. A. N. WOOD, of Mamboia, who is now in England on furlough, pleads earnestly for men for the Wasagara, Wagogo, and Wanyamwezi. He writes:—"I suppose within a radius of ten or twelve miles we have over 200 villages. To carry on existing work we need two missionaries, with their wives. We also need two now for itinerating, and two men to commence work amongst the Masai. At Gayilo, a place about fifteen miles off, they would meet a friendly Megi chief, who would help them in the language, and introduce them to the roving bands of Masai, many of whom settle near him for several months in the year."

STUDENTS AND MISSIONS.

Recently, Mr. R. P. Wilder sailed from England for India, there to pursue his labours in connection with the Student Volunteer Movement, which took its rise at Mr. Moody's Conference in America six years ago. For more than a year past Mr. Wilder has been busily engaged on this side of the Atlantic endeavouring to arouse an interest among British and Scandinavian students in the great question of the evangelisation of the heathen. Before leaving our shores he furnished the American Board with a detailed report of his doings in Europe. A brief digest of this statement will, we trust, be of interest to our readers, and may secure from them a prayerful sympathy with the object of our brother's mission.

Reaching London early in July, 1891, he paid a visit to Oxford University, and was able to enrol some of the college authorities there as fast friends of the Volunteer Movement. The end of July found him at Keswick Convention, where he met Bishop Tucker, of Uganda, and others practically interested in the condition of the heathen world. He gave an address during Convention week, and was there introduced to various Scotch friends, who heartily invited him to visit the Northern Universities and also to speak at the Perth Conference of that year. These indications of coming success in his mission decided Mr. Wilder to make a somewhat prolonged stay in Great Britain rather than proceed at once to India as he had contemplated.

Owing to his weak state of health, however, he had to take a period of rest which was mainly spent in Norway. While there he was able to go to the University of Christiania and to address large bodies of students and others, on the claims of foreign mission work. A passing call was also made at Copenhagen on his return journey; this resulted in an invitation to meet the Danish students in that University later on. He returned to England, but the condition of his health was still critical, and he was obliged to forego a projected stay of three months at Oxford for quiet work among the students there. That period had to be spent on the Continent in regaining a measure of health and strength.

About the middle of January in the present year Mr. Wilder was able to be in Edinburgh, where he addressed gatherings of young men studying at the different colleges. One of his largest gatherings was at Professor Drummond's Sunday night meetings for students in Oddfellows' Hall. Two days were next given to Glasgow with highly encouraging results. Speaking of this visit, Mr. Wilder says "The missionary men were quiet, but on fire with new purposes; and when a Scotchman is on fire it means a steady burning."

The beginning of February saw Mr. Wilder at Cambridge, where he had a memorable season of effort among the undergraduates, and where no small enthusiasm was created. There, as in Scotland, quite a number of students decided to volunteer as missionaries to the heathen. It may be noted that at one of his public meetings in Cambridge there were students present from the colleges for young women at Girton and Newnham. In the end of February he came to London to meet the committee of a Students' Missionary Union that had been formed some two years before. After conference with them, the committee agreed to merge their society in the proposed Inter-collegiate Student Volunteer Movement. An apparent hindrance to the united forward movement was thus removed.

After visiting Cambridge again and forming a branch of the movement, Mr. Wilder was enabled to redeem his promise to visit Copenhagen, where a genuine interest in the work was manifested; many students were influenced in the direction desired, and five young men definitely volunteered. He then proceeded to Aberdeen, where some substantial fruits of his labour were seen. He afterwards revisited Oxford in the interests of the Inter-University Conference fixed to be held in Edinburgh in the beginning of April last. That important gathering duly took place, delegates being present from Cambridge, Oxford, London, Belfast, St. Andrews, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Edinburgh Universities. The "Student Volunteer Missionary Union" was formed, with an executive committee of four. A travelling secretary to the union has since been appointed in the person of Mr. A. T. Polhill-Turner.

Since April Mr. Wilder has been busy, so far his health would allow, in consolidating the wo thus happily inaugurated among the young m studying in British and Irish Universities. He a dressed the General Assembly of the Free Church Scotland in May last, and "the news that sixty m connected with the Free Church colleges had offer themselves for foreign service profoundly stirred t Assembly." Over £3000 were contributed towar the Forward Movement during the Assembly. August he was able to visit the Scandinavi Students' Conference held at Horten on board man-of-war, and had there the opportunity deepening the missionary zeal created by his form visit.

As we have already stated, Mr. Wilder is now his way to India. He earnestly desires t believing prayers of Christian friends everywhere behalf of the difficult and important work that li before him in that land.

MISSIONARY METHODS.

From time to time, in varying circumstances, ve different methods have been pursued by missi workers. We rejoice, however, to believe that ma are now labouring on much the same lines as Re Ruttonji, Nowroji and Lucas Maloba, of Auran abad, Western India, as set forth in the ninety-thi annual report of the Church Missionary Societ Mr. Nowroji commenced his labours at Aurangab in 1870, when he found 100 baptized Christia there. He has since then baptized 1400. T secret of the blessing which rests on his work probably revealed in his own description of pr cedure at the fair at Paithan, on the banks the Godavery.

"We avoid discussion. We do not preach again their religion. We not revile their gods and go desses. We do not find fault with their absu notions. But with deep compassion we prese to their sad minds and burdened souls Christ t Saviour of sinners. We tell them of man's falle state—the terrible effects of sin; and the marve lous love of God the Father in sending his Son save and recover our fallen race.

"We tell them of the love of the Holy Ghos without whose agency the lost image of God in t soul could never be regained. To hungry a weary multitudes, scattered as sheep without shepherd, we have pointed to the Good Shepher We have read to them; we have sung to the Our Christian hymns—replete with Bible truths sung to Indian tunes on native musical instrumen have a soothing influence on their minds. Ma were moved to tears. Many asked what they we to do to be saved. Many begged of us to go their distant homes and repeat the same sweet sto Many asked to be taught to pray."

Rev. H. J. Goffin, missionary at Kadiri, in t Cuddapah district of the Madras Presidency, a follows a sound and useful method. In the ninet eighth report of the London Missionary Society read:—

"Our chief method of work is the preaching the Gospel. In Kadiri itself, away in the village by the wells or corn-stacks, wherever people w gather to listen, we stand and preach the words life. Morning, afternoon, and night we do this, t best time of all in the villages being at night betwe seven and ten o'clock, after the people have return from their day's work. Then they gather round as we sit and sing our hymns by the light of o lantern, and talk of the Lord Jesus and his salv tion. Often, at such a time, the impression ma seems to be deep and good. Very seldom do a dispute with us; only now and then one will a why will not the worship of Rama do as well.

"The great trouble is that we cannot follow our work. We have no one to leave amongst t people to give practical shape to any good resol tions or plans they may make. As the result of t village preaching of the year, I have two or thr different centres, each urgently needing the e blishment of a teacher, and I am placing one of t two men in one of these centres, leaving myself wi the other one to go on with the itineracy of the re of the district. To such straits are we reduced."

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—The fortnightly h day movement has been instrumental in sendi away 5100 children, factory girls and lads, a some adults, to the holiday homes in the country and by the seaside during the past season.

IN THE HOMES OF THE POOR.

Winter has brought its usual tale of sorrow and ed among our poor. The need and sorrow, thus peated, is to us a fresh call to service, a fresh portunity of loving ministry for the Master's sake. he following sketches are supplied by Mildmay aconesses, who spend their lives in going in and t among the poor of the East-end and other stitute parts of London, and are cases of present ed, representing many more of similar nature. l help given is distributed by them through the ng weeks of winter in personal visitation, and with e utmost care. Nothing comes amiss in the way relief, for somewhere or other in the thousands of ese needy homes everything is wanted—food, ing, clothing, doctoring, means of livelihood:—

A NEEDY TINKER.

"'Come in, lady! take a seat—it is clean,' says a or old Christian tinker. 'I have just come in—ve been out all day and only taken fivepence. ave bought this two penn'orth of pieces (meat) d a three-farthing egg—which they let me have a halfpenny—for my poor wife. Am just going boil it.' (At the same time putting it in a can lieu of a saucepan.) 'It does grieve me to see r lying so ill; the doctor says he can do no more her.' Here the old man broke down. 'I do e her, and can't get her what I would like.'"

MORNING CALLS.

"Such a quaint figure he looked when he first me to the Mission Hall! Quaint he is still, with black, bead-like eyes, and grizzled hair; but ere is a light now upon his face which was lack- before, for the true Light has shone into his art. This servant of Christ cannot get regular ployment; his sight is bad, and times are hard. earns a little by calling workmen early in the rning—one at 3 a.m.—for which he gets four- nce a week. The wife, who is old, and by no ans strong, does a little washing. The eldest at home is now stricken with consumption. ll anyone help this needy brother to supplement 'morning calls' with cups of coffee for the epy workmen? If he could open a small coffee p, he thinks he could make it pay."

LIFE IN A WASHHOUSE.

'Come with me down this dark passage, and take eep in! There is no door to screen it from the e of the passers by in the street, nor to hinder from looking in. This is the house of C. and two boys. The broken windows have been nded with paper, which is now well perforated; only furniture being two old chairs and a rickety le. The fire-grate has been removed, but as the mney still remains, a fire is made in a small pail g on a nail in the opening. As only a penny- th of coal is purchased at a time, great care is en in using it, for, as C. says, 'Cos, you see Miss, oes so fast.' There on the broken hearth, in the t and ashes, one of the boys is crouching, read- a tract just given—naked dirty feet peeping out m a pair of his father's trousers which look like ticoats round his little body, while a sleeveless ket and a few stripes of shirt fail to cover his l little frame. His brother is out selling water- sses, and the father at his usual occupation of king match-boxes at 2¼d. per gross. Being alysed, he is unable to go out to work."

EFFORTS TO WORK.

'A sad picture meets my eyes on entering a hen in one of our streets. A poor wife—now fined to her bed four years with rheumatism, fectly helpless in her limbs, and having only the of her left arm—lies there a patient sufferer. e cannot sit up, so when her husband is at work is all alone and helpless. When at home, he is ost tender and affectionate nurse. She is fond reading, and is well informed, but cannot hold a k in her poor crippled fingers. She has been hout the use of her right arm for some years, but ore she was obliged to take to her bed she used vash and work with her left hand. She would the piece of work at one end to her knee, hold the other end in her mouth. Truly hers has n a life of suffering, unnoticed, it may be, by se around her, but surely not by the One who is ched with the feeling of our infirmities."

WALKING WITH GOD.

"'God always knows what she wants and sends long just at the right time, even if it is only an bone which a neighbour was throwing away, but ich she can make into a nice drop of soup.' Such he grateful testimony of a lonely woman. Old, ble, very poor, and very often hungry, she is sure that she will never want for long. Her room is beautifully clean, and her worn dress most carefully mended—for 'God does not like his children to be dirty and untidy.' She adds to her income of 1s. 6d. a week by doing a little needlework, when she can get it, which she manages so nicely by feeling where to put the needle, her eyesight being too weak to let her see the stitches."

Contributions will be gratefully received by Mrs. Codner, Conference Hall Office, Mildmay Park, London, N.

MR. W. R. LANE AT BECKENHAM.

A ten days' Evangelistic Mission has been held at the Public Hall, Beckenham. Meetings for preparatory prayer were held in June, July, and August, and weekly throughout September, October, and November, at the different churches and missions in turn. Announcements were left at every house, while to the larger houses of this fashionable suburb neatly printed cards of invitation were sent by post. The opening workers' meeting was held on Saturday, November 19, when Mr. Lane delivered an address from 2 Kings iii. 16, 17.

On Sunday, about eighty gathered for prayer at 8 a.m., and evangelistic services were held at 3.30 and 7, when large congregations gathered. They continued to assemble every evening throughout the week, and listened with deep interest and attention to the earnest powerful words of the evangelist. Large numbers stayed to the after-meetings, and many were pointed to the Saviour. Afternoon meetings were held from Tuesday until Friday, at 3.30, when a goodly company assembled every day to hear addresses on Christian Life and Service. A band of workers went into the streets every night for an hour, before the meeting, and sang and preached the Gospel story, inviting the people, especially the young men, to the Mission meetings, and not without success. A large choir sang for half an hour before each meeting and led the singing during the meetings; while solos were sung at every service by Miss Ada Rose, whose sweet singing of the Gospel message not only proved a very great attraction, but was known to have been the instrument of conviction to sinful hearts.

On Saturday evening Mr. Lane gave his "Talk on a Penny," when the hall was crowded, but it was on the second Sunday that the showers of blessing came. In the afternoon the hall was filled, and souls pressed into the kingdom. In the evening the hall was crowded in every possible part before the service commenced, and after a most powerful, heart-searching address, in response to the invitation a large number of men and women rose and went into the smaller hall used for inquiry purposes. The Lord was present to save, and ere we separated we had fifty names of men and women who professed to have found peace. On Monday and Tuesday the hall was crowded again. On Wednesday, the closing night, Mr. Dudley Kidd gave the address, speaking earnest words to both saved and unsaved.

More than 120 have passed through the inquiry rooms and will be drafted to the respective churches they wish to join. In several cases husbands and wives were converted on different nights. In one case the wife converted first sent in a request to pray for her husband, and came a few nights after with weeping eyes to Mr. Lane, saying, "To think that God should have answered my prayers so soon." On Sunday night a woman, after she had been spoken to, was proceeding towards the door and met her husband coming from another part of the inquiry room. Neither knew the other was there, and words fail to describe the joy that came to them as they realised that both could now serve the Saviour together. Many prayers will follow Mr. Lane and Miss Rose to their respective fields of labour.

PALESTINE.—It is gratifying to learn that Caxton's art is making rapid progress in Jerusalem. Two weekly newspapers, in pure Hebrew—Ha'Or ("The Light") and Hachawazeleth ("The Flower")—are issued, and, being non-partisan, both enjoy a good circulation. Jerusalem, a well-known annual, held in great repute on the Continent, is also published there. It is curious to note that several of the monasteries in the Holy Land publish their religious works through the Jewish book-publishing houses established in Jerusalem, though several of the institutions have their own presses and issue Latin and Arabic books for private use.—Jewish World.

WINCHESTER SOLDIERS' HOME.

Many of our readers know something of the vigorous work carried on by the Misses Perks, at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, and know also that God has been pleased to bless it to many—both soldiers and civilians. Again and again we have been delighted to observe quite a number of young recruits, mere lads some of them, attending the services. The city of Winchester being now a Depot, recruits for the Rifle Brigade and certain regiments of the line are sent there for training. Coming, as many of these do, from country cottages, and from the influence and care of simple godly parents, the life is to them new and strange, and its temptations are manifold. Hence the value of such a mission and home, where these young fellows come under the Christian influence and teaching of earnest and loving workers.

But besides this useful service among soldiers, there is a very blessed evangelistic and mission work. It has been observed by many, that the saving of souls is really recognised as not that sinners are to be saved by any human mechanism, but that all the services and testimony are directed to this end, that the workers pray for and expect such fruits; and that, as a matter of fact, many unsaved and anxious ones have been found to come for the express purpose of "getting converted here," some having walked many miles. Thus, in the evangelistic services held in the Hall, anxious souls are continually found seeking help in coming to decision.

The out-village work, carried on by bands of earnest helpers, has also proved fruitful in winning souls and in awakening spiritual interest in places previously dark and dead. Many encouraging and interesting cases have transpired from time to time, indicating the blessing of God resting on these evangelistic efforts.

The Bible carriage has also been kept at work this year with cheering results, reaching, as it has done, where the messengers of the Cross have seldom penetrated. We have before us several incidents, of which we may shortly give one or two, illustrating specially this phase of the operations.

OUTLYING AND LONELY PARTS,

Miss Perks thus presents her need:—The Soldiers' Home, Winchester, like many other missions, has this year suffered much financially by the removal, through death, of many of our oldest friends and most liberal supporters; still we believe the Lord would have us carry on the work He is so graciously blessing, and no doubt when Christians are made aware of the need they will gladly respond to this appeal. We require £250 by Christmas. Those who are anxious for the salvation of souls, and desire to help forward a purely soul-saving work, cannot find a better investment for their money: every penny received is spent for this one object. No sing-songs or questionable entertainments ever find a place in our mission. We have lost many helpers by being decided in this matter, but we have found the Gospel faithfully and simply preached all-sufficient for the past eighteen years, and we trust its power still.

Our meetings are attended by soldiers, men in the regiments, also time-expired men who are policemen, postmen, railway-men, prison warders, etc. Besides the Gospel services in our large hall, we have men's meetings, Bible readings, mothers' meetings, and children's services regularly at the Soldiers' Home, also in the various halls belonging to the mission—all attended with much blessing. This work has been carried on simply, but we believe faithfully, since 1874. During the whole time conversions have been constant and real, and as a result missions have been started and carried on for many years, and are still going on in various places at home and abroad, and earnest Christian workers are to be who were led to the Saviour in this mission. We often hear from them and their converts. Communications should be made to the Misses Perks, Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

DISTRESS AMONG EAST END JEWS.—At a demonstration of Jews on Tower Hill on Saturday, Mr. Lewis Lyons, secretary of the Jewish Unemployed Committee, declared that there are fifteen thousand unemployed Jews in East London, and that their distress is such that some had even attempted to sell their children!

Missionary Messages.

FROM BOHEMIA

Mr. Alois Adlof, of Prague (23, Petersgasse), tells of his work in the land of Huss:—After longing to take the Gospel into districts where it was preached before the Jesuits extirpated it, I went, in company with a brother, to the native town of John Huss. Arrived at an inn, we were visited by some people. We preached the Gospel, and told them of Huss, and why he died. The people were moved, and I at once sold one copy of the New Testament. Without asking my name, people gave me money that I might send them on eight other copies. After a while I got a letter requesting me to send fifteen copies more. A second journey convinced us that God would move some of the people to seek Him, and in our hearts there arose a desire that Husinec might become an evangelistic centre for the whole region.

The native house of Huss is the property of a national association. But behind that house is a barn, with a garden which belonged to the house. I wrote letters to friends, and God gave success, so that I bought the barn. To make it into a suitable meeting-house, about £100 is needed. There are many towns in Bohemia where the Gospel is not yet preached. As, for instance, Pribram and Klatory, which have from 12,000 to 15,000 inhabitants. For from £50 to £60 a year evangelists could be placed in either.

FROM CANADA.

Rev. A. Tansey writes from Somerset P.O., Manitoba:—

I am in charge of a very large mission in N.W. Manitoba. I have seven centres of work and give three services every Sunday, which involves about an average of forty miles' driving winter and summer, besides the driving to visit all the people in a scattered mission like this. They gladly listen to the "Old, old story" of the Gospel, and are always glad to receive good, pure reading matter.

I am settling at Somerset, which is about the centre of my work. It is a scattered settlement of French Roman Catholics and English farmers. There is no village, only a store where our P.O. is located; but an enterprising servant of Satan has built a saloon or public-house, where bad whisky and other drinks are sold. There are quite a number of young men, both French and English, Roman Catholic and Protestant, and they have attended the services on Sunday evenings, but I have no way of reaching them during the week. I am most anxious to open an old wooden building as a reading and recreation room for the winter as a counteractive to the whisky saloon. It will cost us about £50 to fix the place for the winter, and I am anxious to have it open soon, as great inducements will be held out to the young at the "rum shop." If I could get a magic lantern and slides they would be of the greatest help to me. I shall be grateful for any help, either money for fixing the building, books for the library, papers, magazines, etc., for the reading-room, as well as for magic-lantern or diagrams for the purpose of giving lectures.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA.

Mr. L. C. Irvine, secretary of the Wesson Rio Harbour Mission, writes:—

Our mission has been very successful in its work among seamen, and they seem to appreciate our efforts on their behalf, as they gladly avail themselves of the lodgings which we furnish. We lodge forty or fifty men per night now, and as the work is growing we feel that we cannot longer delay moving into better and more roomy quarters. We need a place where we can lodge more men, and have a hall with a seating capacity of 100 or more; also a large reading-room.

To do all this we find ourselves obliged to appeal to friends in England, for we shall have to buy bedding, cooking utensils, dishes, etc., as well as furniture for the meeting-hall and reading-room. God has been with us, and has blessed us, and we feel sure He will incline the hearts of some to aid in this good work. Communications may be sent to Colonel Hobbs, 7, Warwick-square, W., Carlisle.

FROM THE WEST INDIES.

Writing from the Mission House, Port au Prince, Hayti, Rev. W. S. Smith, pastor of the Wesleyan Church, says:—

We praise the Lord for the way in which this country is opening to receive the Gospel. Though the established religion is Roman Catholic, the present Government is very favourable towards Protestants, and has rendered all the evangelical churches substantial help. The President, General Hyppolite, is very anxious to have good schools established in the country, and is doing all in his power to further the interests of general education. We want, in order to start a superior school for girls, a French-speaking lady, well educated, a trained teacher, and a thorough Christian, who would be willing to come out to Hayti and take charge of the school.

We have started, with great success, magic-lantern sermons on Sunday evenings; crowds of people come to listen to the old old story, and have it impressed on their mind, by the illustrations thrown on the screen. In this way we are preaching to people who have not been in the habit of coming to a Protestant place of worship, and we are confident the blessing of the Lord will attend our efforts. We need good scriptural slides. Can any of your readers help us in this matter?

FROM INDIA.

Miss Anstey has now 107 children under her care. The subscriptions, etc., for the past year amounted to R.1339 7, whilst the expenditure was R.3392 15 2. The deficit falls entirely on Miss Anstey's private means, and but for services given almost voluntarily this good work must have ceased; Miss Anstey has struggled on bravely against all difficulties and much discouragement.

In a work of this kind the people of this country can take little interest. These poor children's mothers are the outcasts of the Bazaar, and their fathers belong to an alien and conquered race, who do not remain generally long in India. The result is, the children are left to grow up in every sort and kind of vice which gross ignorance can produce. To rescue them as much as possible is the noble work Miss Anstey has undertaken, almost single-handed, and I write to all your friends at home who love our common Lord and Saviour to help her as much as possible.

If £15 or £20 a month can be secured for her with regularity, most of her present difficulties would be overcome, and the work of saving these poor children from passing miserable lives in this world, and then perishing for ever, could be well and fairly started.

Bangalore. Wm. T. Tucker, General R.E.

FROM CHINA.

Rev. G. A. Huntley writes from Ch'en-Ku-heien, Province Shensi, China, on August 28:—

We have had the joy to-day of baptizing and receiving into church fellowship nine additional members, seven brethren and two sisters. The baptismal services took place at the riverside. These new converts are the fruits principally of our country stations, two being from Tsao-pa-li (distant 10li), in which place we hope to build a chapel this autumn. Three others come from Ting-Kia-Miao district (distant 10li), and one from Ko-Kia-ho (distant 60li). The three remaining candidates live in the city; two of these, an old man and his wife, are the fruits of the earnest prayers and exhortations of a blind member.

After the service at the riverside was over, we adjourned to the chapel, where our nine new friends were received and welcomed into church fellowship, and the whole service was concluded by remembering our Lord's death in the breaking of bread. This has been a day of special joy to us, but our joy is multiplied when we think of the joy in Heaven. Will friends praise the Lord with us, and pray that we may see "greater things than these"?

BRIDLINGTON QUAY.—Mr. J. M. Wilson, hon. sec. of the Sailors' Bethel here, writes:—"For the past fourteen years we have been holding services for sailors in an old building. We are now endeavouring to erect an iron room in which to continue the services, which have been signally blessed of God. A few weeks ago a poor woman called upon our manager, asking us to allow her little girl, twelve years old, to have a card and endeavour to obtain subscriptions. In a week or so afterwards the little girl returned to the manager with £3 2s., which she had collected from door to door. A little boy and girl brought 5s. 6d., which they had raised by saving their weekly pennies, because they had attended the Bethel with their mother, and would like to help us to get another."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Two years ago a dear child wrote to me that she had been to a large gathering to hear a Dr. Clark from America tell of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. "It was a splendid meeting." "Why, mother," she wrote, "it seems to me to be just what you want amongst your country folks only there is a pledge to be taken, and it looks a hard one!"

The little message and accompanying pamphlet on the principles of the society came to me like an inspiration. We had only recently left the great city with all its busy interests and its never-ceasing roar of the hurrying multitudes of suffering, sorrowing and sinning humanity, to make our home in the far-away country. It was a great change the quiet hush everywhere, a new experience. One's first thought was, Surely nothing can hinder close communion with God here. The stillness and the wonderful glory of ever-changing beauty all around must ever keep Him in loving remembrance. How pure and simple the lives of the villagers must be!

Yet how different we found it. No union existed between professing Christians, for the Episcopalians would have no dealings with the Nonconformists. There was a wide line of demarcation between the upper and the working classes, the latter being permitted little liberty of conscience either in religion or politics, whilst drink, with all its attendant evils, was prevalent.

But God has everywhere his witnesses, and there often strangely isolated, were a few earnest, faithful followers of the Lord Jesus, humble men and women, most of them ignorant in this world's learning, but deeply taught of God through his word. Most of them had to walk miles to their chosen place of worship, and excepting on Sunday they had little in common to bring them together.

To these the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour came with wonderful freshness, and at once brought all into close spiritual sympathy. Twelve joined as "active members," and some young boys and girls as "associates," whilst some of the elders whom we could not keep out became honorary members. The hitherto cold, dreary prayer-meeting of two or three in number became

A LIVING HEART-BURNING SERVICE.

The members were led to very definite consecration of themselves and their powers to God, and to all came a deep sense of personal obligation to work for Christ, and of responsibility towards those around them. They realised that, whatever their calling might be, in that calling they must shine out "for Christ and the Church."

The young Christians gained confidence by taking part in prayer or testimony, and their own faith became more definite and assured by outward expression. The Bible had not been an unknown, unused book. Now the weekly "topic" gave guidance to more definite Bible-reading, and it was very refreshing to listen to the result of a week's meditation on the subject appointed. The expositions were often quaint and original, such as could only come from those set in "solitary places" simply taught by the Spirit. Even the youngest would have a text ready, bearing upon the subject before the meeting.

Personally, I shall ever feel grateful to God for the blessing received at those little meetings. Still more do I rejoice that such a movement as the Y.P.S.C.E. is spreading through our churches, and thereby training up so many young disciples for Christian service. The society is built up on prayer and the Word of God, therefore it must go on. That all its members may remain true to the spirit of our pledge, is the prayer of A Christian Endeavourer.

THE LABRADOR FISHERY.—The efforts of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen to ameliorate the condition of the large migratory colony of men, women, and children which each year visits the Labrador fishery have met with much appreciation in Newfoundland. Sir Terence O'Brien, the Governor, has initiated a movement for the furtherance of the objects of the mission. Dr. Grenfell, who was the surgeon on board the hospital ship Albert, which has been this summer on the coast, gave a detailed statement of the season's work, and a resolution was moved thanking the mission "for its philanthropic generosity," and promising the support of the Newfoundland people in a continuance of the mission in future years.

For the Young.

THE STONE AND THE GLASS.

By William Luff, Author of "Life Boys."

The illustration was as simple as could be—a mmon stone, picked up in the road, but it gained e children's eyes, and the speaker who gets eyes ts ears, and simple as it was it showed the little k that their hearts were Hard and Harmful.

That stone, if hurled among the girls, would do ischief: it would hurt, and it would hurt because was hard. How hard-hearted some little people e, and how often they hurt! The stone was also

Dead and Dirty.

The speaker scolded it for being hard and harm-l, but when he put it to his ear it did not cry nor y it was sorry. "Hush!" he said, "can you hear sigh or sorrow?" No, it was dead—dirty too; were little hearts, unclean with sin.

"How can we cleanse this hard, harmful, dead, d dirty stone?" By putting it in the fire? "No, it only makes it blacker; fires of affliction do not ange the heart."

"Let us try binding it." So a piece of string s produced, and bound round and round the ne; but this did not alter matters, it only bound e dirt and the stone more tightly together. Bind-g ourselves by resolutions will not cleanse the art. "Perhaps beating and breaking might swer." No, it would only be broken in its dirt, d not cleansed from its dirt. Strokes and nishment will not purify.

"Suppose we bury it," was next suggested, "and g it up next meeting." That would not do any od; for if it was buried a hard, harmful, dead, d dirty stone, it would be just the same when ught forth from its grave. This showed how, if died sinners, we should rise sinners. All was vain, it could not be changed by Burning nor binding,

Beating nor breaking,
Nor burying.

A happy thought seemed to strike the speaker, he wrapped the ugly old stone in a clean sheet white notepaper. Holding it up in triumph, he claimed, "Now it is white!"

"No, no! it's only the paper," shouted the ung sharpers.

Alas! they were right! Beautifying did no more an the burning, binding, breaking, and burying. tward religion is only white paper over a hard, rmful, dead, and unclean heart.

A glass of water was now produced, clear as stal. "Is there any dirt in this, children?" No."

"Then this glass is like Jesus, of whom we say, n Him is no sin.'" (1 John iii. 5.)

"Now this water can cleanse the stone, but only taking the dirt and making it its own."

Eagerly the little eyes watched the filthy stone op into the pure water. Gradually the clearness appeared, the liquid became thick and muddy. last the clean stone was taken out, separated m its defilement.

"Is there any dirt on it now?" "No." "Where the dirt?" "In the water."

"Just now all the dirt was on the stone, and ne in the water; now it is all in the water, and ne on the stone."

Then came the application, "For he hath made to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we ght be made the righteousness of God in Him" Cor. v. 21).

It was the same stone, yet how different! ashed children would still be full of play and fun, t yet they would be different.

"Can I drink this water?" was the next ques-n. "No, it must be thrown away." So it was en to one of the school officers, who left the m with it. "When Jesus took our sins, even Father could not be pleased with Him, but hid face and turned from Him, as I turned from t water. It is being poured away: so, when us took our sin, He 'poured out his soul unto ath' (Isa. liii. 12), and even said, 'I am poured t like water'" (Psa. xxii. 14).

A fresh glass was brought, or rather the same ss was re-filled. The dirt was gone, and the ss was none the worse. So Jesus came back to disciples, and showed Himself, the same Jesus, t without sin. Sin was gone, and He brought everlasting righteousness.

"Now, as the stone might fall into the dirt again, suppose we put it into the glass, not for cleansing, but for keeping. How pretty it seems! Look, children, before it can fall, it must fall through the bottom of the glass and through my hand. When Jesus has washed us, we are hid with Him in God: so we can never perish, for we are in the glass, and the glass is in God's hand. "My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand" (John x. 29).

As a final appeal was made, and the children were asked to pray David's prayer, all felt they would know the meaning of the words better than ever before, "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow" (Ps. li, 7). And somehow there seemed more meaning in the concluding hymn —

Thorny was the crown that He wore,
And the cross His body o'ercame;
Grievous were the sorrows He bore,
But He suffered not thus in vain.
May I to that Fountain be led,
Made to cleanse my sins here below;
Wash me in the Blood that He shed,
And I shall be whiter than snow!

GLEANINGS.

Learn patience, boy, and self-control,
You own a team that's full of fire;
Two wayward steeds that draw your soul,
One's called "Self-will," and one "Desire."

My child, thou shalt always have joy in the evening if thou hast spent the day well.

A little girl claimed that she had got a new heart. On being asked to explain, she said, "Once I ran after sin; now I run from it."

My son, be careful how you kick against authority. Your boasting about being free and being independent, of owning no master, are signs that you are in a bondage of slavery.

My son, do not play with temptations. Safety lies only in keeping clear of any approach to what is doubtful. He who would not hear the bell must not meddle with the rope.

Said Day to Night,
"I bring God's light;
What gift have you?"
Night said, "The dew."
"I give bright hours,' Quoth Day, "and flowers,"
Said Night, "More blest,
I bring sweet rest."

PEACE.

Psalm xxvii. 5; xci. 1.

White dove, white dove, like an angel
Thou dost past my casement fly;
Well I love thy snowy pinions,
Well I love thy sweet, soft eye;
Now I pray thee, little cooer,
Tell me, whither dost thou fly?

Up to flit thy wings in sunlight?
Up to find a purer breeze?
Up to reach the peaceful shadows
Of the great, calm cedar trees?
There to coo and there to nestle,
Unmolested, at thy ease?

White dove, white dove, I am like thee;
I, too, seek a calmer height,
Long I for the quiet spirit,
Saintly, meek, and fair and white;
I would reach God's secret shadow,
There to rest in great delight.

I will seek it, I shall find it,
For it ever hath been found,
Of the lowly souls who sought it
With a love and faith profound,
In the shining and the shading
Of the tree* on Calvary's ground.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES.

The National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, which have now been carried on for nearly fifty years, are doing as good, honest, and extensive work as ever. This is abundantly evident in the report now before us, giving as it does details of the varied homes and ships, with accommodation for about one thousand boys and girls, all the institutions being now in a thoroughly healthy condition.

In Shaftesbury House, the recognised centre of operations, a hundred boys are received. The work of the year has gone on well and the spiritual results have been very definite. For in all the branches of the work the definite aim is ever and always to win the children to Christ; and there is clear evidence that this issue is frequently secured. The letters from old inmates, now doing well at home and abroad, attest sufficiently the satisfactory outcome of the whole.

In the same way, Fortescue House at Twickenham, accommodating 120 boys, has also much good work to report and good results to show; so also the Farm School at Bisley, where 150 boys are trained for agricultural pursuits, gardening, etc., and the Shaftesbury School (150 boys) also at Bisley. The training ships Arethusa and Chichester for 200 boys have done grand service for lads with seafaring tastes.

All these are for boys, but their sisters are not forgotten, two homes at Sudbury and Ealing providing for 212 girls. Lastly, there is the working boys' home for lads who, having passed through the homes, are earning their own living but have no home of their own to go to.

Introducing the report, the secretary, Mr. Bristow Wallen, writes:—The work of the several homes and training ships speaks of the persevering efforts of the superintendents and matrons and those who support them. Difficulties have in some cases beset the work, and in others changes in the staff have affected the rate of progress; yet, notwithstanding these obstacles, the committee feel glad in saying that real and lasting good has been accomplished. The committee fully recognise that their labours are for God, and even secular work, so called, becomes spiritualised when hearts are actuated by motives of love and service to our Heavenly Father. Their aim is to turn out God-fearing boys and girls, and the more they strive for this end the more successful their labours will become. The more developed a boy's or a girl's moral and spiritual nature grows, the easier will be the work in the purely secular part of their training. Experience proves this, and we have a happy instance in our own institutions of the fact that the school which stands highest in moral and religious tone is highest in school work and in trade occupations, and thus the golden rule of "seeking first the Kingdom of God" holds good in school life as in the days of maturer existence. The committee are urging their officers to aim at raising the children to a still higher level of moral and spiritual living, because it is the proper basis for all true work.

The hand and the heart of one who was privileged for so many years to guide and direct the affairs of this society are now still in death, but subscribers and friends who have so nobly contributed from year to year may rest assured that the work will be carried on in the same spirit of loyal devotion to the Father of the fatherless, and that the rallying cry will ever be, "For God and the Children," and the motive of all the labours the children for God both in this life as well as for the life hereafter. The offices of these Refuges is 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C.

EAST-END EMIGRATION FUND.—During the last ten years this organisation has assisted over 4000 English men, women, and children to leave overcrowded London, where they were half-starving from want of work, and to emigrate to various British colonies where wages are good and labour is in demand. In a circular just issued, Rev. J. F. Kitto, chairman of committee, says:—"We fully expect to be overwhelmed this winter by applications for help from respectable families anxious to emigrate, but unable to raise money themselves for the journey; and we already have an unusually large number of deserving applicants on our books." The hon. secretary, Captain G. Le M. Gretton, in the course of a long journey through Canada, was gratified by the thriving condition of the emigrants who have been assisted to Canada. Communications may be addressed to him at the Office, 44, Newark-street, Stepney, E.

Adrift on the Atlantic.

NARRATIVE BY MR. D. L. MOODY.

Those friends of Mr. Moody on this side of the sea who watched the daily papers for intimation of his arrival at New York, where he was due on Tuesday or Wednesday of last week, must have been troubled at the absence of any news, day after day. This mysterious silence was accounted for on Saturday evening, when the Spree, the German vessel on which he had sailed from Southampton, was towed into Queenstown harbour by the Lake Huron, of the Beaver Line. The Spree was entirely disabled, having broken the shaft of her propeller, and with thirty feet of water in her after compartment. The following narrative, given by Mr. Moody to a correspondent, will be perused with the deepest interest:—

Mr. D. L. Moody, the well-known American evangelist, who, with his son, was a saloon passenger, in the course of a narrative, said:—"Nothing unusual occurred until about six o'clock on Saturday morning, November 26, when, lying awake in bed, I suddenly heard a loud report as if an explosion had taken place. The lights were put out, and very quickly afterwards the ship trembled all over. My son, in his bare feet, and with little clothing on, rushed out of our room to ascertain what had occurred. In the corridors he found numbers of the passengers, like himself, only partially dressed, some with lifebelts on, hurriedly making for the companion-way to get on deck, and all in a state of intense excitement, the ladies especially. Meanwhile I had got up, and hastily dressing myself made my way upon deck, and found that Captain Willigerod was at his post on the bridge. It was not yet daylight, and everything around looked dull and dismal. All classes of the passengers had scrambled up on the promenade deck. A good deal of alarm existed, and several women were crying.

"All were inquiring what had happened, and Captain Willigerod lost no time in ascertaining the nature of the accident, and commissioned his officers to explain to us that the main shaft had snapped, but no immediate danger was to be apprehended. Nevertheless, as a precautionary measure, orders were given to the crew to clear away the boats and have them provisioned and ready for any emergency. While this work was being carried out the intelligence was conveyed to the captain that the after compartment was rapidly filling with water, and not a moment too soon were the bulkhead doors leading into the saloon closed, as the water contined to pour into the vessel from a hole made in the iron bottom, caused in some mysterious way, it appears, by the broken machinery. I felt that the condition of the steamer was very serious, and that the situation for the souls aboard was becoming most critical indeed.

"At nine a.m. the water in the second cabin had risen so high that the berths were flooded, and the passengers had to get accommodation in the saloon, many of them having their effects completely saturated with water. Several of the passengers observed that the afterpart of the hull of the Spree had settled down in the water to an alarming extent, and this was a fresh cause for anxiety. During the day the crew worked hard in various parts of the ship. Some were bending on the sails, and others were engaged in removing everything that could be moved from the stern to the bow of the ship in order to lighten her aft. When evening came it was found that we had drifted upwards of fifty miles to the southward, and away out of the track of steamers; but as the sails were being set the officers stated that we would soon work back to our original position. Not a soul aboard the ship went to bed that night, and many of the passengers remained out on deck watching the rockets which were sent up every half hour in the hope of being able to attract some passing vessels.

"Sunday dawned rather disagreeably. The wind blew strong, and there was a tremendous swell of a sea on, and as the steamer was helpless she rolled in a terrible manner, so much so, in fact, that a few passengers were thrown down on the deck and got hurt. During that entire day no ship of any class was sighted, although some of the officers were especially told off to scan the horizon with telescopes. On Sunday afternoon the passengers assembled in the saloon, and we had a special service of prayer, in which Protestants, Catholics, Jews, and all joined. It was really a most impressive meeting. We earnestly asked God to save us from the dangers with which we were surrounded, to calm the elements, and send to our assistance some friendly ship.

"During the afternoon the weather moderated, and the Sunday night was remarkably fine and clear. All through the night rockets were again sent up, and a huge tar barrel was set fire to on the upper deck. This had a grand effect on the calm surface of the sea, and it lit up the heavens as far as the eye could see. It was a splendid distress signal, and we all felt confident that it would be the means of attracting the attention of some distant vessel. Fortunately for us it was. The enormous glare was seen by the crew of the steamer Lake Huron, of the Beaver Line, bound to Liverpool from Montreal, and her commander altered her course and bore down on us. At 2 a.m. on Monday, the 29th, a shout went out on the broad waters of the Atlantic from one of our seamen that a steamer's light was in sight, and the passengers at once crowded out on the deck to watch the coming of the long-looked-for vessel, which was to be an assurance of safety to all.

"After some hours, to the intense joy of the passengers, the Lake Huron was close by us, and her commander ascertaining our serious condition offered to tow the Spree to Queenstown. Needless to say, the assistance was accepted, and a hawser having been connected with the Lake Huron, she commenced to tow us at about nine a.m. on Monday last. Up to noon on Tuesday 133 miles were covered, Wednesday 127, Thursday 171, Friday 123, and to Queenstown, arriving at five p.m. on Saturday, 208 miles. I must not forget to state that the conduct of the captain and officers was most excellent, and the discipline of the crew beyond praise. A collection was made for some of the poor women in the second cabin, whose effects were destroyed, and the crew also received a few hundred dollars."

It is a very interesting fact that when the two ships reached Queenstown, the towing vessel, the Lake Huron, had not sufficient coal left for another day's sailing. At Queenstown a thanksgiving service was held on board. Mr. Moody read Psalm cvii. As he read verses 21 to 31, and saw people weeping around, he could scarcely suppress his own emotion. The Doxology concluded a never-to-be-forgotten service.

Mr. Moody preached on Sunday morning at the Methodist Church, Queenstown. A large congregation gathered from all churches. The evangelist spoke with unusual tenderness from the words "God is Love." Many an eye was moistened and many a heart stirred by his address. He sailed the same day in the Etruria for New York.

General Howard, of the United States Army, a Christian officer, was also on the Spree, and decided to wait for the next German boat. He preached in the same church on Sunday night, from John iii., 35-36.

By the time these lines are read we trust Mr. Moody and his son will be nearing the shores of their own land. Many loving hearts will join in sincere thanksgiving to God for the deliverance given in this time of great peril, and will pray that the solemn experiences of the past week may redound to the Divine glory.

MISS CUSACK IN THE EAST-END.

On Monday evening the Edinburgh Castle was crowded to excess with a deeply-attentive audience, on the occasion of a lecture by "the Nun of Kenmare," Canon Fleming presided. Several agents of the Roman Catholic "Ransomers" actively engaged themselves in distributing controversial tractates, but the arrangements were such as entirely to suppress any attempt at opposition inside the walls. The Chairman made a point for Dr. Barnardo by connecting Miss Cusack's visit with the principle of the Homes that destitute children were at all times admitted irrespective of sect or denomination, and the lecturer emphasised in the course of her address the contrast between this true "liberality" of practice and the liberality falsely so-called of Roman Catholicism.

Bearing the title of "The Two Ladders, or How the Pope Gets to Heaven," the lecture resolved itself into the central contrast which existed between the open Bible of the Protestant Reformation and the substitutes for the way of salvation set forth by Papal Rome. From the statement of the Romish Catechism, "Thank God the Bible is not necessary," to that of Cardinal Manning, that Christianity was not derived from the Scriptures, Miss Cusack carried her indictment that Rome had shut the Bible, quoting her authorities with great particularity, and pressing home again and again her charge that "the liberty Rome seeks is liberty to take away your liberties." An eloquent appeal was directed against the general indifference to the advances of Popery in England, and an ardent exhortation followed to maintain the Protestant succession and to guard against Ritualism, which is only Romanism in disguise.

Next Monday evening Miss Cusack will again lecture in the same hall, her subject being "Why I left the Church of Rome." Sir S. Arthur Blackwood has promised to preside.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The annual supper to first offenders and discharged prisoners was given on Monday evening under the auspices of the St. Giles' Christian Mission. The chapel in Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, was brightly decorated. The top gallery was set apart for "discharged" of adult age; and in the body of the room were a hundred or more of boys, some of whom had been in prison, but most of whom had been handed over to Mr. Wheatley, the superintendent, at the very threshold of what might otherwise have proved a criminal career. Bright, sharp lads many of them were, and all of them looked clean and well cared for, and seemed full of high spirits.

On the platform were many of the old friends of the mission, and some new ones. The Recorder, Sir Charles Hall, M.P., occupied the chair for the first time, and among those supporting him on either side were General Moberly, General Waddington, Mr. Baylis, Q.C., Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Hadden Corser, and Mr. Plowden, representing London magistrates; Colonel Plummer, Governor of Borstal Convict Prison; Lieut.-Colonel Milman, R.A., Governor of Holloway Prison and of Newgate, and many others.

The Treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, read the report from which it appeared that the representatives of the mission had met during the year, at the doors of Holloway, Pentonville, and Wandsworth Prisons, somewhere about 26,000 discharged prisoners—that is to say, they have given to that number of men and women invitations to breakfast, and an offer of such help as the Society could give and the people themselves stood in need of. About 20,000 seem to have accepted these breakfasts, and a great many of them have had assistance in getting a fresh start in the world.

Mr. Wheatley, in the course of his speech, referred to a man who had been discharged, and who was met at the prison door by the workhouse van containing his four children. When he had gone to prison they had been taken off to the workhouse, and when he stepped outside the prison without work, or home, or money, there were his four children to meet him, and he was requested to take charge of them there and then, or to come with them into the workhouse. The Society took compassion on him, and his children were taken for a time. This was an admirable illustration of the need of such a friend as this mission aims at providing; and the testimonies from the judge in the chair, and the magistrates and prison governors and other friends, could leave no doubt in any mind as to the character of the work done, and the desirability of liberally supporting it.

Mr. Bushby, the magistrate, wrote a letter expressing his regret at being unable to be present and declaring emphatically that magistrates are greatly indebted to the Society. Sir Henry Hawkins also wrote and enclosed a cheque for £50, and among other letters read was one from Sir Edward Bradford, Chief Commissioner of Police.

UGANDA.—The Bishop of London, addressing a meeting of the Kensington branch of the Church Missionary Society last week, said that missionaries went to Uganda with their lives in their hands and at their own peril, but the Government afterwards stepped in and identified themselves with the work and by their presence created a danger which otherwise might have been avoided. If England had thus compromised herself before the people of the land, he held that there could be no withdrawal from the responsibility incurred, and that England, having entered Uganda, was bound to see before coming away that the missionaries and their converts were at least as safe as they would have been if the Government had never gone there. Sir Gerald Portal, Consul-General for Zanzibar and Commissioner for British East Africa, is to be despatched as Commissioner to Uganda.

THE LATE REV. DAVID SAUNDERS, D.D.,

WELSH PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER, SWANSEA.

THE Welsh Presbyterians may with fitness be described as a Connexion in deep mourning. Within the space of eighteen months no fewer than three of their most eminent ministers have been called away. The first to depart was Rev. Dr. Thomas, of Liverpool, who, like Apollos, was an "eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures." Soon followed Rev. D. C. Davies, M.A., Principal of Trevecca College, a keen thinker and reasoner concerning "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." Our present sketch outlines the life and work of the third great loss to Welsh Presbyterianism. Although not widely known in England, Dr. Saunders's name was a household word in his own country.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. Harrison Goldie, Swansea.)

DAVID SAUNDERS was a native of Emlyn, Cardiganshire, where he was born in 1831; but his youth and early manhood were spent at Morriston, in Glamorganshire, whither his parents removed when he was eight years of age. Here the family became identified with the Philadelphia Calvinistic Methodist Church, the father assuming the leadership of the congregational singing.

While still young, David showed himself possessed of abilities of a high order, his aptitude for mathematical studies being truly remarkable. His gifts as a speaker were also developed early, and somewhere about his nineteenth year he became a candidate for the ministry. He entered Trevecca College in 1851, but was released at the end of two years' study, to become a student at the University of Glasgow. Here he remained only twelve months, his return being prevented by ill-health and other circumstances.

The first pastorate which Mr. Saunders accepted was at Penclawdd, Gower. Some two years later, in 1857, he undertook the charge of the newly-formed church at Bethania, Aberdare. The same year also witnessed his ordination to the full work of the ministry. The young preacher soon attracted attention, and the chapel became too small to accommodate the growing congregation. Another had to be built, and a second church formed. In addition to his work as a minister of the Gospel, he undertook the editorship of the Welsh Patriot, which he conducted with marked ability. Neither politics nor sociology, however, were allowed to usurp the premier place in his affections. This place was from first to last occupied by Gospel preaching. Some idea of his popularity may be gleaned from the fact that before he left Aberdare he was one of the preachers selected to take part at a great "preachin association" held in North Wales.

In March, 1862, Dr. Saunders left Aberdare for Liverpool, and there even greater results attended his ministry. The chapel was found inadequate to accommodate the increasing numbers who flocked to hear him, and the magnificent Princes-road Chapel—or, as it is sometimes called, the Welsh Nonconformist Cathedral of Liverpool—had to be built. Owing to ill-health in his family, he removed in 1868 to take charge of Lady Llanover's church at Abercarne, Monmouthshire. In the comparative quiet of country work he found time to turn his attention to the study of medicine and music. In the former especially he became an adept, and sometimes effected cures where professional skill had proved unavailing. He also studied music, and contemplated bringing out a Congregational Tune-book—a project, however, which he subsequently abandoned.

In 1873 Dr. Saunders removed to Swansea, where he became pastor of the church at Trinity, Park-street. This connection remained unsevered until his death on Oct. 19 last. His services were in large request for anniversary gatherings, chapel openings, and the "preaching associations," which form so prominent a feature in Welsh religious life. He was also a recognised leader in the ecclesiastical courts of the denomination, his influence nearly always being on the side of progress and reform.

He was accorded, in 1877, the high honour of being elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Welsh Presbyterians. Six years later he visited America, and went on a preaching tour through the Welsh churches of the United States. With regard to the results of that tour, we cannot do better than quote the words of an able Welsh minister in America:—"Dr. Saunders's preaching was the means of elevating the ministry of the country. He gave it a higher place in the minds of the people, so that it was easier for others to preach after him." Soon after his return to this country he was urged to prepare a lecture upon his travels, but his reply was, "I was not sent to lecture, but to preach."

Dr. Saunders possessed in rare degree the qualities which go to make a great preacher. In addition to his deep spirituality and splendid intellectual and oratorical powers, Providence had bestowed upon him a physical temple well befitting the great soul enshrined therein. Withal he was the possessor of a voice of unusual richness and power, and this added considerably to the charms of his public utterance. To Dr. Saunders belongs the honour—as was pointed out by Rev. Principal T. C. Edwards, of Bala, in the memorial sermon he preached at Aberdare—of having inaugurated a new era in the preaching of his native country. The great Welsh preachers of former generations discoursed chiefly upon the existence and attributes of God, especially in his relations to mankind as Lawgiver and Judge. Towards the end of their sermons, however, they would bring in Christ as the One who had met all the demands of the Law, and satisfied its requirements on behalf of transgressors. Dr. Saunders adopted a different method. He chose Christ as the central theme of his preaching. His example was soon followed by others, and to-day there is no country in the world where a crucified Saviour is more faithfully upheld from its pulpits than is the case with Wales.

For the first half, or even three-fourths, of his ministry, Dr. Saunders discoursed much upon "Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God"; but for the last ten or fifteen years he delighted to dwell upon the beauty and excellences of the Saviour's character, and especially his love, tenderness, and sympathy.

Towards the beginning of this year signs of a breakdown in health manifested themselves, and some months later he proceeded to Leamington to consult medical specialists. Here he became seriously ill, and his life was despaired of, but "prayer was made without ceasing of the Church unto God for him." He recovered sufficiently to be removed to Aberdare. From thence he went to Crickhowell, and after a short stay there, went to the residence of his only son at Penarth, to die. During his illness he sent a letter to the South Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association, in which he quoted the words of Frances Ridley Havergal, as voicing his own experience:—

I take this pain, Lord Jesus,
As thine own gift;
And true though tremulous praises
I now uplift.
I am too weak to sing them,
But Thou canst hear
The whisper from the pillow,
Thou art so near.

Upon one occasion during his last illness, and while delirious, he seemed to imagine himself in the pulpit, and turning to the watcher by his bedside, he exclaimed in a strong voice: "The people look at me. They say, what a voice, what a preacher: they fail to see the Person behind us." Then turning to prayer, he said: "O Lord, Thou knowest I have striven to let the light fall on Thee, but if the people will not see Thee, then dash me to the ground!" "But," he added most pathetically, "pick me up Thyself, Lord!"

May the Lord who gave Dr. Saunders to the Church in Wales soon raise up others, who will, with equal faithfulness and power, preach a crucified and risen Redeemer as the only hope for perishing souls!

Gathered Gold.

The way to do a great deal of work is to be continually doing a little.

The only rich people are those who give up all for Christ.

Sin forsaken is one of the evidences of sin forgiven.

"The prayer, the wish, the thought,
The feebly spoken word,
The plan that seemed to come to nought,
Each hath its own reward.
"Reward not like the deed,
That poor weak deed of thine,
But like the God Himself who gives,
Eternal and Divine."

HE SHALL DIRECT THY PATHS.
(Prov. iii. 6.)

I commend to Thee, Lord, my impulses and my startings, my intentions and my attempts, my going out and my coming in, my sitting down and my rising up. —Bp. Andrews.

God doth not need
Either man's work, or his own gifts; who best
Bear his mild yoke, they serve Him best. His state
Is kingly; thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest:
They also serve who only stand and wait.—Milton.

To souls truly gracious, Christ's yoke is easy, and his burden is light; his commandments are not grievous, but joyous. I delight in the law of God, after the inward man, saith Paul.

Thomas Brooks.

Think, and be careful what thou art within,
For there is sin in the desire of sin;
Thank, and be thankful, in a different case,
For there is grace in the desire of grace.

"GO FORWARD."

(1) From the point to which God has led us. (2) Along the path He bids us take. (3) By the light which He affords. (4) With the staff (promises) which He provides. (5) To the land which He prepares. —Oosterzee.

GRACE.

God's grace wipes out the past:—"I have blotted out thy transgressions." It provides for the present:—"My grace is sufficient for thee." It maps out the future:—"I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

MISSION WORK AMONG THE JEWS.

According to the excellent Revue des Missions Contemporaines, issued by the Basle Missionary Society, there are at present fifty-five Protestant associations for the evangelisation of the Jews, having 127 stations, and employing about 400 workers, three-fourths of them under English auspices. Germany, which initiated the work during the last century by the Institutum Judaicum, founded at Halle, only employs thirteen labourers. Anti-Semitism has acted as a stimulant to evangelistic zeal, and since 1870 as many as twenty new societies have been formed. Only one-seventh of the total number of Jews live in Protestant countries. Hundreds profess Christianity every year through the efforts of the various societies, and again hundreds pass into Protestant churches, consequent upon instruction and light received through other channels.

The London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews has arranged to hold a monthly meeting for prayer in the mission room and library, Palestine-place, E. The object of the meeting is not to impart information about the work of preaching the Gospel to the Jews, but to increase the number of those who pray for it, and to lead, by God's grace, those who are engaged in the London mission to greater spirituality of mind and more earnest devotion to the cause. The second Friday in the month is the day on which the meetings will be held.

The Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague street, Whitechapel, is the centre of a work which was established thirty years ago and is still carried on by Mr. Herman Ehrlich. Many devoted friends of Israel who are no longer with us supported the Mission in years gone by, but of late the missionary has sighed for firm supporters in their place. Mr. Ehrlich is greatly beloved by hundreds of old and young whom he has had the privilege of bringing to God, and whom he has helped in sickness and distress. Communications may be addressed to the missionary, at the Conference Hall.

Rev. J. B. Barraclough, M.A., formerly associated with the London Jews' Society, is continuing his labour of love among the 3,000 Jewish converts in London. He is a father, friend, and spiritual pastor to Christian Hebrews, many of whom have to pass through the furnace of trial. By a legacy from a departed Israelite, he is enabled to provide for seven aged converts at Ebenezer House, Mildmay. Recently he was led to take another house at South Hackney, where seven other aged Hebrews are sheltered, clothed, and fed. Several young Hebrews are being trained for the mission field under his care. Some converts have to be started afresh in life, others need assistance for emigration, or help from time to time. He feels the great need of a home for young converts (who increase in numbers daily), where, besides being deepened and strengthened in the faith of Christ, those of linguistic abilities and education may be trained for useful commercial life or as evangelists for abroad. Mr. Barraclough's address is 11, King Edward-road, South Hackney, E.

THE TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY of the Jersey McAuley Mission, at 316, Water-street, New York, was commemorated lately. Superintendent Hadley made a short address, reviewing the history of the mission. Then followed a "testimony meeting," many men and women telling the story of their conversion. Addresses were delivered by several speakers, one of whom was Postmaster-General Wanamaker. The work during the past year is said to have been more extensive than in any other.

NEWICK, SUSSEX.—A very substantial new mission-hall was opened here on Wednesday week. Rev. J. B. Figgis preached an impressive discourse in the afternoon. The building, which holds about 200, was well filled by Brighton and local friends. In the evening the hall was crowded. Earnest addresses were given by the voluntary workers who conduct the meetings and other friends. The mission is entirely undenominational. Colonel F. Roberts will conduct special evangelistic meetings, commencing December 1.

MR. WOOLEY AT HIGHGATE.

A remarkable series of Gospel Temperance meetings was held last week at Archway Wesleyan Chapel, by Mr. John J. Wooley, a man thoroughly in earnest, and one who has experienced the horror of a drunkard's life, and knows the futility of his unaided struggle for freedom, and the apathetic attitude of too many Christian professors; but happily, also, the saving power of Christ. From the beginning the meetings were highly satisfactory in point of numbers. The interest never flagged, and Mr. Wooley won and held a place in the hearts of the people that was at once gratifying and helpful. The only regret was when the mission was ended, for everything indicated that if a continuation had been possible only increased interest would have resulted. At a children's meeting on Wednesday, Mr. Wooley was joined as a speaker by Miss Helen Hood, of Chicago.

Over a hundred pledges were taken, and the active workers say that some are those of individual cases any one of which would be worth the whole cost and effort of the mission. An additional striking result is that over fifty names have been added to the roll of subscribing members of the society, which must mean a largely increased force for good. A great many women donned the white ribbon bow as a badge of abstinence, and many men put on the blue. On Saturday afternoon, at a short extra meeting, Mr. Wooley gave an account of his misssion work on Rest Island, Minnesota, where he has established and maintains a Christian home for drunken men who sincerely wish to lead pure lives.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

To make a happy fireside clime,
For weans and wife,
That's the true pathos and sublime
Of human life. —Burns.

A child is God's problem, waiting for man's solution.

We must govern ourselves before we govern our children.

Teach your children to respect their elders and themselves.

Children are the ozone of human life, inspiring us with hope, rousing us to wholesale sacrifice.

Whenever you see a drunken man it ought to remind you that every boy in the world is in danger.

A child's heart is like good soil; the first seeds sown therein draw its earliest strength for good or evil.

The safety of our land, the brightest and best on which the sun shines, depends on the education of its rising generation.

The life of the child, as of man, consists not in seeing visions and in dreaming dreams, but in active charity and in willing service.

The child's performance of little duties now is a forecast, either in good to be strengthened or evil to be guarded against, of his future career.

Polycarp was converted when he was nine years old, President Edwards at seven, Dr. Watts at nine, and Matthew Henry before he was eleven.

Every true pastor is beginning to recognise what a fund of willing service lies at his guidance and disposal in the young people of his congregation.

If a child finds out that he can successfully appeal to the one parent against the decision of the other, he will soon learn to disobey both.

Let us teach as little as possible that our children will have to unlearn. One harsh word of ours may leave a black spot on a child's soul while life lasts.

Do not despise children because they are little. So is the helm that governs the ship. So is the bit that guides the horse. So is the word that rules the world.

Think of it! Our Lord Jesus was once the very age of your wayward boy; and his obedient, reverent life makes it possible for all boys of that age to be the same.

Behind what is said the child seeks for the man or the woman. Children's eyes are clear and penetrating; they look for what is sincere and real.

One of the most remarkable and most significant features in the Bible, so far as children are concerned, is the fact that it has no less than nine different expressions to denote a child.

What weary journeys have those little feet to do to cross the wide, wide world—those queer little feet that curl up their pink toes so complacently, throned on mother's lap before the nursery fire.

In households where family religion flourishes, the Church seldom loses the children, but in houses where a lukewarm type of piety exists we may keep the parents, but the children are often lost to us.

One sentence of honest praise bestowed at the right time is worth a whole volley of scolding. A storm of scolding has about as good effect on childhood as a hailstorm has on young plants.

Personalia.

Mr. Thomas Spurgeon has, with his family, reached safely his home in Auckland, N.Z.

Rev. Thomas Cook arrived safely home last week after his fruitful tour in South Africa.

Dr. Usher, who for a number of years has done good work in Belfast, is coming to Orpington, Kent, having accepted a call to the Baptist Church there.

Dr. David Grant, whose noble medical mission work at Chin-chew is so well known, has intimated that, on account of ill-health, he must retire next spring.

Mr. Eugene Stock expected to reach Colombo on Monday, 5th. Thence he goes to Bombay for the Decennial Missionary Conference to be held there at the close of the year.

Rev. George Short, B.A., of Salisbury, has, at the wish of the Council of the Baptist Union, consented to allow himself to be nominated for the presidency of the Union.

Rev. J. R. L. Hall and Mrs. Hall, who left England in September, have arrived at Jerusalem. Mr. Hall has had two attacks of fever, but was better when last heard from. He reports that Rev. F. F. Adeney and Miss Sachs are unwell.

Rev. J. T. Wigner, the veteran minister, ex-president of the Baptist Union, has signified his intention to close his ministry at Brockley-road, London, at the end of this year, and Rev. John Lewis, his co-pastor, has accepted the sole pastorate.

Rev. George Grenfell is now engaged on a commission for delimitating a territory bordering upon the Congo Free State. Some weeks ago a telegram as to a rising of the natives excited considerable anxiety for his safety, but letters received show he is safe and well.

Dr. Samuel Davidson, the well-known Biblical scholar, author of several important critical works, and a valuable translation of the New Testament, has been awarded a pension of £100 a year on the civil list, in recognition of his contributions to theology. He is now in his eighty-fourth year.

Rev. J. H. Horsburgh writes from Sin-tien-ts Sz-Chuen, August 29th, whence he hoped to start on the following day for Chentu, to visit Miss Mertens and the other ladies there, "to see our C.M.S. house," and then to visit other places and "make advances towards securing a lodgment in some other towns or villages." Mr. Horsburgh writes:—"All is quiet, and as far as we know our lives are just as safe here as in England."

Mr. James Monro, the late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, who has been engaging in missionary work in India, is in England. He proposes to return to India early next year, when, it is understood, he will be accompanied by his wife and his eldest son, a medical graduate of Cambridge University. Mr. Monro has been working on independent lines with great success. His influence, particularly with educated Hindoos, has been remarkable. Miss Monro, who went out with her father, is stationed at Nuddea.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson, who has had two offers from America—one from Vanderbilt University and the other from the Metropolitan Church, Washington—has declined both, being resolved to remain by the Children's Home. He is, we may note, shortly to be married to Miss McPherson (Sister Ella), of the Children's Home. Miss McPherson has been an officer of the Home for about thirteen years. She comes of a Methodist family in the north of England.

Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, whose work in East London is so well known, has felt compelled, owing to ill-health, to contemplate resigning the pastorate of Harley-street Congregational Church, Bow. An eminent physician has recommended from six to twelve months' rest, and expressed the opinion that the work has become too great for his powers of endurance. The matter is now before the church, the members of which readily offer the pastor any length of time necessary for perfect restoration, and are disposed to appoint an assistant minister. Mr. Hurndall's answer will be given in a few days. The church is in a state of great prosperity. During his pastorate of 16½ years the membership has risen from 89 to over 1000, and a large number of accessory works are in a flourishing condition.

BRIGHTON.—The second public meeting of the twenty-five associated free churches of Brighton and Hove was held at the Pavilion on Friday evening last, the chair being taken by Mr. Marriage Wallis. This association has now been in existence about fifteen months, and seems likely to prove a useful factor in the advancement of the cause of righteousness in the town. The addresses on Friday were fearless and uncompromising.

Obituary.

BISHOP CHARLES WORDSWORTH.

The Right Rev. Dr. Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane, has passed away at the advanced age of eighty-six. At Oxford he was the tutor of Gladstone, Manning, and Hope-Scott; and as warden of Glenalmond College he introduced the English public school system into Scotland. He entered upon the bishopric in 1852. A profound scholar, he formed one of the New Testament Revision Company, and many of his published works relate to the Greek text.

MISS M. W. SMYTH.

Many a tear-dimmed eye will read with deep sorrow of the sudden removal, from a life of wide usefulness, of Marian, daughter of the late Mr. Robert Watson Smyth, of Wadhurst Castle, Sussex. For the past seventeen years she had devoted her time, property, and strength to a home for invalid gentlewomen, which she founded when only twenty-one years of age, and carried on to the day of her death. She lived amongst those under her roof, caring for them as a tender mother. Many a sorrowing one found in her a loving, sympathising friend, Her love for and interest in the C.M.S. was most keen, and only two months before her death she had been appointed hon. sec. to the branch of the Gleaners' Union, in connection with the church to which she belonged.

MAJOR ROSS, ABERDEEN.

We regret to announce the death of Major John Ross, Chief Constable of Aberdeenshire, which occurred last week. For some time past Major Ross had been in failing health. He was appointed head of the Aberdeenshire police force in March, 1863. Prior to that time, he had completed a service of twenty years in the Indian army, Bengal establishment. During the whole time of his service as Chief Constable of the county, Major Ross took a lively interest in public affairs. An attached Free Churchman, he was for a good many years an elder in the Free High Church congregation, and was repeatedly a member of the General Assembly. Latterly he had been a member of Queen's Cross Free Church. Although exercising his military tactics in the governing of those under him, his gospel had more of love than war in it. He was connected with various charitable and religious institutions, and took a deep interest in special gospel work; communications from his pen frequently appeared in our pages some years ago.

REV. DR. HORT.

The death is announced of Rev. Fenton John Anthony Hort, D.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. Dr. Hort had for some time past been ailing, and last summer he took a journey to Switzerland in the hope that the air of the mountains might do him good; but the effect was rather harmful than otherwise. He came back worse than he went, and after some months of anxious and fluctuating illness he passed away in his sleep early on Wednesday morning last week.

Dr. Hort was only about sixty years of age. He graduated from Trinity College in 1850, being bracketed third in the First Class in the Classical Tripos, and in the following year was placed in the First Class both in the Moral Science Tripos and in the Natural Science Tripos. In 1852 he was elected to a Fellowship at Emmanuel College, a position which he held until his acceptance of a living in Hertfordshire five years later. In 1872 he returned to Cambridge as Divinity Lecturer at Emmanuel. Dr. Hort became Hulsean Professor of Divinity in 1878, and in 1887 was appointed Lady Margaret Professor. His fame as a scholar rests principally on his work in connection with the New Testament, the text used for the Revised Version being mainly that published by Dr. Hort and the present Bishop of Durham, Dr. Westcott.

REV. CHARLES GRAHAM.

After a somewhat long and painful illness, this well-known pastor entered into rest on Thursday last, December 1. His removal is one which will deeply affect many hearts. He was widely known and greatly loved both for his unaffected simplicity of spirit and intense attachment to the Lord. His sufferings for weeks were very great but his soul was calm. The rock on which he rested trembled not, for it was the Rock of Ages. He never murmured. His one desire was to pass into the presence of the Master. The atonement of Christ which he preached in life was his consolation in death. He has left, as his memorial, a monument more enduring than brass in a memory of consecrated service which, we believe, shall be to the praise and glory of God in the day of Christ. In an early number we propose giving portrait and sketch.

Our lamented friend was buried on Monday at Henley. There was previously a funeral service in the Avenue-road Church, at which Pastor Frank White and Pastor James Douglas gave short addresses. There was a large attendance, and the service was deeply affecting. Many friends and sympathisers assembled at the cemetery, where an address was delivered by Mr. Fuller Gooch. Next Lord's Day memorial services will be held in the Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush, when the preachers will be: morning, Pastor Fuller Gooch; evening, Pastor James Douglas.

REV. DR. BURNS, KIRKLISTON.

Much regret will be occasioned, not only among the members of the Free Church in Scotland, but in the colonies and the United States, by the announcement of the death of Rev. James Chalmers Burns, D.D., of Kirkliston. Although for years he has had a colleague and successor, he may be said to have literally died in harness at the ripe age of eighty-four years. A native of Brechin, he came of a family which gave many ministers to the Scottish churches. Two of his brothers were Dr. Islay Burns and Rev. William C. Burns, the celebrated missionary in China. After labouring for some time as assistant to Dr. Robert Buchanan in North Leith Parish Church, in 1837 the deceased minister was called to the Scots Church, London Wall, where he ministered for several years. At the Disruption he did much to interest the English people in the cause of 400 ministers who for conscience sake left the Establishment and all its emoluments; and in that year he was called to the Free Church of Kirkliston. In supplying the summer stations at Lausanne, Cannes, and Aix-les-Bains, Dr. Burns became acquainted with continental life, and widened his theological outlook. For a long period he filled the office of Convener of the Colonial Committee of his Church, and in that capacity showed an enlightened zeal in all that concerned the welfare of Canada. In the winter of 1849-50 he spent six months in the Dominion. In 1879 the Free Church recognised its sense of Dr. Burns' services by raising him to the Moderator's Chair in the General Assembly. He was an ardent supporter of the total abstinence cause, and all along gave the Blue Ribbon movement his cordial sympathy.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Charles Minor has been holding Gospel temperance meetings at Reading. This week he is at Tilehurst.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray have conducted a mission at Y Denil, Newbridge, Mon., which drew many to hear the Gospel.

Mr. William Forbes has, during the past week, been giving addresses in Glasgow in Trinity Free Church Mispah Hall, and St. Andrew's Hall.

Linlithgow.—Mr. Oscar Owers has concluded three weeks' Evangelistic meetings here. His addresses were much appreciated. The Town Hall was crowded on the last night of the mission. During his short stay here Mr. Owers has made many friends, and his work will be long remembered.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has conducted a fifteen days' mission in Fulham, under the auspices of the local Nonconformist Union of Churches. During part of the time the weather was very unfavourable; but the audiences grew in numbers throughout, and not a few, especially among the young people, were led to receive the Saviour.

Gipsy Smith is in the midst of a remarkable movement in Yonkers, N.Y., the whole place, according to the Yonkers Statesman, being stirred, and on Sunday evenings three of the largest churches have been crowded simultaneously. It is early yet even to estimate results, but many appear to have been awakened to a sense of danger, and have professed acceptance of Christ.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has closed a successful Gospel Temperance Mission at Ligoniel and Ballysillan, where he delivered eighteen addresses during last week. He was assisted by ministers of all denominations. During dinner-hour he addressed the hundreds of employees connected with the mills; meetings for women and children were also held. During the past four weeks Mr. Burnett has delivered sixty addresses and administered the Gospel temperance pledge to between two and three thousand persons.

Reading. — Mr. Newton Jones conducted a successful ten days' mission in connection with the Reading Sunday School Union, from November 20 to 30, which was well-attended throughout, the interest increasing as the mission progressed. At the services for children the very great interest and attention shown was a proof of the bond of sympathy that existed between them and Mr. Jones. The services for adults, and the afternoon Bible readings, were much appreciated, as was shown by the large congregations that assembled. The Word was with power, and many names have been taken in the enquiry room. The meetings were held in the King's-road Baptist Chapel and very valuable assistance was rendered by the pastor (Rev. C. A. Davis), together with other ministers of the town.

Letters to the Editor.

SPIRITUAL POWER.

Dear Sir,—I have read with great interest the letters with the heading "Spiritual Power." About fifteen months ago I was led to trust Christ as my Saviour. Since then I have enjoyed the Christian faith so far, but I feel the want of something which I am led to believe is this Spiritual Power. I so often fall under my temptations, and get so discouraged at times that I hardly know what to do.

Can anyone from experience or good authority tell me if one can have this Spiritual Power working in them in the ordinary routine of workshop life, with its too-often harassing cares and monotony, or is it only for ministers, missionaries, and such like, who are wholly engaged in Christian work? I hope someone led by the Spirit of God will give me some more light on this all-important question.—Yours sincerely,

An Anxious One.

Dear Sir,—I have been for the last two months earnestly seeking light on this subject, and I should be very thankful if I could have a few questions answered. "A Rowing Man" says that the "receiving of the Holy Spirit is a gift to ask, and receive, and thank God for." Does he mean that I am simply to accept the filling of the Holy Spirit, to thank God, and then to go forth to my daily work, believing, in spite of all apparent evidence to the contrary, that I am filled with the Holy Spirit? Ought I not rather to ask for this precious gift and then wait, as the Apostles did, until I receive a definite and unmistakable filling, until a change comes over me that I cannot fail to recognise?

Ought there not to be after the filling of the Holy Ghost an alteration in feelings and wishes, similar to that experienced after conversion, only far deeper? Ought not the love for Christ to be definitely strengthened? Ought there not to be an abiding realisation of the Master's presence? Ought it not to be easier to resist temptation, and to live as Christ would have us live?

In fact, may we not definitely expect that God will work in us "to will and to do of his good pleasure" (Phil. ii. 13), thereby changing our life from one of continual struggles, failings, and sorrows, to one of basking in the sunshine of his love, one of living as seeing Him who is invisible, one of finding that, spite of temptation from without, the power of sin is broken within us, and we live in liberty and power?—Yours truly,

A. W. L.

Dear Sir,—Is not your correspondent "One Who Wishes to Do Good" perplexed by looking for a marked and sensible manifestation of God's power in giving the Holy Spirit where there is no warrant for expecting it? Individual Christians may have had special experiences, but do we not often harass ourselves by making the experience of others the measure of our own? There are diversities of administration, but the same spirit.

The sudden sense of power was given, we know, to some under the old dispensation, enabling them to prophesy or work miracles; but it was not always to the holiest or most faithful: witness Samson and Balaam. On the other hand, the Apostles urge their hearers to "grow in grace," to "put on the new man," but they do not speak of a special or instantaneous experience as a part of this. Is it not more like God's usual working to expect the Spirit to act as his powers in nature do—the sun, and dew, and rain in ripening the fruits of the earth? The Lord's own illustration is, "the seed (sown by the husbandman) springeth up he knoweth not how."

The best evidence for an individual Christian that he has received the Spirit is, surely, an increased desire to serve his Master, an increased sensitiveness of conscience, and an increased sense of his own sinfulness. Such marks as these can hardly deceive us; while a sensible emotional experience very easily may, as has often been seen.—Yours faithfully,

E. J. W.

FAITH—PRAYER—REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—I have read with great interest the accounts in the Christian of Mr. Moody's visits to England, and to Ireland, and also the most encouraging statement with regard to the latter that there are tokens of a repetition of the revival of 1859. I well remember that revival, as far as the report of it is concerned, and the stirring of heart which it produced in this land, not without result in England, as well as markedly in Scotland.

I have in my possession a book published by Nisbet in 1860. It was edited by Rev. William Reid, M.A., and entitled, "Authentic Records of Revival now in Progress in the United Kingdom." Its perusal, and what is traceable of the after-result, have left on my mind a deep impression that the revivals of that time bore three marks, more or less inseparable from all true revivals that are heaven-sent, not what might be termed man-made. That is, that they are unmistakable, irresistible, and lasting.

I would instance one or two examples. Speaking of Minterburn, one writes: "A great and glorious change has passed over this locality. In many of the townships, without any suggestion from me, young and old meet together, before proceeding to the sanctuary on the Sabbath, to plead for a blessing on the services of the day. I have not seen a person under the influence of drink since the month of June, I have not heard a profane word, or even an idle jest uttered."

An account is given from Portrush of a man going to Coleraine "lying on the top of a cartload of coal." A passing hearse was made the means of arousing such deep and agonising conviction that a few minutes after this man, who afterwards spoke of himself as having been "the wickedest in the whole country for drinking, swearing, and every evil work," "was lying stretched on the highway insensible." A merchant passing by, and stopping to help to raise him, hearing his "cries to the Lord Jesus for mercy," when consciousness returned, was convinced of the reality of the revival, which he had doubted before. It is added, "He has gone on well ever since."

Surely as we read these things the hearts of many of us are longing to see and to feel the mighty work of the Spirit of God in our midst. And if the object of this longing is to be attained, I would ask how is its fulfilment to be sought? The same book answers the question repeatedly, and emphatically, by prayer—earnest, expecting, and if possible united prayer. I will give only one short extract from the report from Straid:—"For some time previous to the commencement of the work of revival in this part of the country, the spirit of prayer became deep and manifest among the people of my congregation." Another help seems to have been the stirring up of desire by the reports from the work in other places. Besides this, there seem to have been no means, except the ordinary services and ordinary faithful preaching of God's Word.

I cannot help thinking that if at the present time we could seek first the spirit of grace and supplication to be given to ourselves, and stir up ourselves and others to prayer, that as large and it may be an even fuller blessing is ready to descend upon us from the "open windows of heaven." Never was there a time when more efforts were made to reach the openly ungodly. But often we are like people who are trying every new invention for more efficient husbandry, "while the heaven above is brass, and the earth beneath is iron," for want of the refreshing rain.

I have often thought that if any one minister with his people could for one week lay aside as far as possible all other engagements, and give themselves to prayer—prayer alone, prayer in families, prayer in the congregation, for the realised influence of the Spirit, that one congregation would obtain a blessing at which others would look on in surprise, and be stirred to seek the same. For though ministers must "plant and water," from God alone comes "the increase."

At all events, may it not be possible for Christian people here and there by ones and twos and threes to plead on for a revival, seeking it from the Father in the name of the Son as a gift which must be "according to his will," and refusing, like Jacob, to depart without the blessing, till the twos and threes have been joined by others, and their meetings grown into large and earnest prayer-meetings, and before we are well aware we shall feel with awe, and joy unspeakable, that the Lord is with us of a truth?

ROMISH INTERFERENCE WITH FREE SPEECH.

Sir,—Surely the facts related in a recent issue by Dr. Partridge as to the mob violence to which I was subjected at Hackney, ought to make Christian people reflect deeply on the present condition of this country. Allow me to add another incident of a similar character which has happened since. I spoke in Leicester, where the Romanist mob is not allowed to interrupt lecturers, but they can do as they please outside. A young lady, well known in Leicester for her benevolence to the poor of all denominations, and for her active personal work amongst them, attended the meeting, and anxiously tried to shield me from violence. In return, her dress was deliberately trodden on and torn by a Roman Catholic who ought to have known better, but who boasted of his deed. I think that all who have heard me will give me credit for avoiding giving any gratuitous offence to a Roman Catholic, but I think unless we are to abandon the liberty of free speech altogether in this country, that those who wish to hear my reasons for leaving the Church of Rome should be permitted to do so peaceably. To-day Rome interrupts my meetings; to-morrow she will interrupt all Gospel meetings. Oh! would to God that I could arouse Christian people to the fearful dangers of these last "perilous times." Quite lately I heard a Christian lady make the excuse for not helping my work for Romanists, and for the enlightenment of Protestants as to their wiles, that Rationalism was so much on the increase that it would never allow Rome to predominate. As if this could lessen her duty to oppose in every Christian way the great apostasy.

The delusion of these days is indeed strong. This false liberality is the blind which Satan throws before even Christians, to make them tolerate what God Himself has denounced. Are we to do nothing to save this country? Are we to sit down and fold our hands while idolatry is upheld in our midst? People are very fond of expressing their desire to be Daniels in verse, but when they see a lion's tail round the corner there is an end to the Daniel business. If I am not afraid of being mobbed or killed, I think Christian people ought not to be afraid of helping me to save their children from the cruel death which Rome will most assuredly inflict on all Christian people when she has the power, and every day she is obtaining more power in this country.

If it is said that we ought not to say anything that will offend Romanists, I reply that what we say should be said in love, and lovingly, but we must speak the truth whether people like it or not. If Rome does not like the truth, there is all the more need for saying it. Besides, we owe it as a solemn duty to a coming generation that people should know what Rome does believe and teach, and let me add that Rome has no scruple about teaching in her catechesims that Christians outside her pale cannot be saved, that they are all destined for eternal fire. In a book, quite recently published in this very country (for Rome is getting bold) it is taught that it is not contrary to Christianity to burn heretics; the Bulls of the Pope excommunicating Queen Elizabeth are justified, and the forbidding of her subjects to preserve their allegiance to her, or any heretical sovereign, is commented on approvingly.

While Rome is teaching all this in England to-day, why are we to remain silent and refrain from calling attention to what she is doing?

Yours in the love of the truth of Jesus,

M. F. Cusack.

PARTAKING OF THE LORD'S TABLE.

Dear Sir,—I have just been looking once again at "The Life and Letters of the Rev. W. Pennefather." I was at the first of the Barnet Conferences, the parent of so many, now thirty-six years ago, and the memories requickened through this perusal are very touching. The worship, the prayers, the confessions (there was not much speaking in the morning meetings), the affectionate tone and holy bearing of our beloved friend himself; the mutual fellowship in the truth, and with one another in the Lord, were very sweet and helpful, and have become permanently influential. One also thinks with tender affection, and joy mingled with grief, of the personal friends who formed part of the assembly of "120" at the Supper of the Lord, and who are now present with Him above."

The rememberance of that communion suggests the following remarks:—It took place on the closing day of the conference. In the afternoon of the day before my most highly-prized teacher in Divine truths, himself a visitor at this conference, came up to me, and told me with extreme seriousness, and as though it was a most wonderful event, that it was proposed that we should all take the Lord's Supper together at the church on the following day; and although I was his younger brother in Christ, he asked how I should view it, for neither of us were members of the Established Church. Now there had been gathered day after day Christians from various parts of the Church of God, and although, I suppose neither the idea nor the practice was quite new, yet it was certainly a very uncommon proceeding. Our beloved host himself viewed the proposition with considerable gravity. But we had all sung the same hymns, had drawn near to the same throne of grace to the one God and Father, through the one High Priest, and in the power of the one Spirit. We had also eaten at each other's tables; and now what? I replied, "It is the Lord's table, I will go to it." And he concurred—very likely he had so intended. Therefore, with one exception only, we all partook of the Lord's Supper at the Table of the Lord, as one body in Christ. The one exception was a prominent Christian from Ireland, whose conscience we sincerely respected, although we regretted that he did not with us draw near to the Lord's table.

The newer generation may not think so very much of this, but it was a strange step then, and a great practical advance in Christian catholicity. The principle has been practised and applied a little—not much—more extensively ever since.

The principle having rooted, has growth ceased? Indeed, if the roots are healthy can growth cease? A friend told me that he partook of the Lord's Supper freely with other churches when he was away from home, but not in his own locality. And I expect that such is the case with numbers of large-hearted men. But are not principles best exhibited by practice where we are known? Would it not be for the Lord's glory, would it not illustrate and carry out the truth of the one body in Christ, and of our resulting membership one with another, if sometimes we partook of the Lord's Supper in our own locality, wherever observed? Why wait for conferences, or for aggregate assemblies, or the union of churches? Can we not as individuals carry out the principle of going freely to the Lord's table.

Apologizing for speaking of oneself, although knowing that in doing so one often benefits others, I would say that since the first Barnet Conference, I have now and then attended at the Lord's table, in the Established Church, amongst the Presbyterians, the Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Wesleyans, the Free Brethren, and the Salvationists—for when I was at Portsmouth, these last also took the Lord's Supper; and the "Captain," presiding Elder, invited all Christians to join. In these days, numbers of believers feel free to act as I have acted; only practically whilst most willing that members of other churches should come to their church, they do not go to others. And the point of my exhortation is not that we should be only large-hearted enough to be willing that others should come to our particular community, if we have one, but that where we are welcome in the neighbourhood in which we live, we as believers, should occasionally make a point of going to the Supper of the Lord, wheresoever Christ's holy words are followed, "Do this in remembrance of Me." James Van Sommer.

"WHO ARE THE LAITY?"

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see this important question discussed in The Christian. "Church-membership" seems to me to be the term that needs clear definition. The visible Church, as "a congregation of faithful men," is made up of "members"; and, as such, we want to know what "the qualifications, rights, and duties" of membership are. I hold that they are the same in the case of the clergy, or ministers, and the other members or laymen. I object to the word "laymen," however, because it has been understood to imply a sacerdotal distinction in Church membership, which, as the writer in The Christian so truly remarks, is most un-Scriptural.

At the same time, taking the word "layman" to be equivalent to "member," I do not say "there is no such thing in Scripture as clergy or ministers distinct from other members of a visible Church. I believe quite the contrary. Hence I think the writer of the article in The Christian is mixing things that differ when he seems to ask the evangelical clergy to acknowledge all believers—Church "members"—to be "ministers"—God's clergy. The representative ministry of the Word is one thing, sacerdotalism is quite another.—Yours truly,

SUPPORT OF MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—I have read with painful interest the many urgent appeals in your paper from distressed labourers at home and abroad. Is it not well to ask if we, as faithful stewards, are carefully watching our own talent, denying ourselves, guarding our own outlay, avoiding all unnecessary expenses, studying simplicity in dress, in food, and in household arrangements, that we may "have to give to him who needeth"? Those who, by his grace, adopt this plan, can gladly testify to the joy and peace which ever accompanies full surrender to Him "whose we are and whom we serve."

If all your readers will adopt this plan before they enter on their Christmas arrangements, and send out their usual Christmas presents, they will surely realise and remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

THE LATE MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM'S Dutch picture of the Broad and Narrow Way is still being utilised. Mr. Cockrem, of the Open Air Mission, and Mr. Charles L. Young, of Mildmay, have had most encouraging times with it at Birmingham, Coventry, Weston-super-Mare, Redditch, Godalming, Guildford.

BOW AND BROMLEY.—A Nonconformist Council was inaugurated at a well-attended meeting held at Bruce-road Congregational Church on December 2. The object of the council is to give attention to the spiritual, moral, and social welfare of the district. All the churches represented have been doing this as far as possible in the past, but working alone they have only been able to touch the fringe of the problems that call for solution. By working unitedly as a council the efforts put forth will not only be more comprehensive, but more influential

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Two meetings were held last week in aid of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, when addresses were delivered by Miss Harding, a worker in Delhi. Inclement weather prevented the meetings from being as large as usual, but valuable testimony to the work was given by the speaker.

Friday last was observed in all the Oxford churches as the Day of Intercession for Foreign Missions. Several special sermons were preached appropriate to the subject, and real interest was evinced.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing excellent service in Oxford, by means of an active committee and a vigilant officer. The need of such work in Oxford is as deplorable as it is manifest.

Last Monday, the annual meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was held. Dr. Knight-Bruce, Bishop of Mashonaland, Lord Addington, and two missionary clergymen addressed the meeting. For two years in succession, the weather has proved most unfortunate for this anniversary.

Oxford friends are rejoicing over the answer to prayer in the preservation of Mr. Moody and those on board the Atlantic liner. Testimony to blessing during the Mission continues to be received.

Rev. A. Polhill-Turner, of the C.I.M., has been addressing meetings, both of undergraduates and citizens. A most valuable and powerful evangelistic meeting was held by Mr. Polhill-Turner on Sunday last at the Y.M.C.A. As a member of "the Cambridge Eight" he is doubly welcome here.

CAMBRIDGE.

There was a fair attendance on Sunday week at the Alexandra Hall, when Lord Kinnaird gave the address.

Rev. A. N. Wood, from Mamboia, gave a very interesting account on Monday evening at the C.M.U. of his work in that district in East Africa. The country extends from the coast towards Uganda, but has hitherto been little worked by missionaries. Mr. Wood read an extract from a letter he had received some seven years ago from Alexander Mackay begging for at least two or three men to work among the natives. It is sad that this earnest appeal from the grave, as it were, should remain unanswered.

The same evening a meeting was held in aid of the Navvy Mission. The Principal of Ridley Hall presided, and Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston gave an address. The mission does an excellent work among the many thousands of navvies employed on great undertakings in different parts of the Kingdom. University men would find scope for their energies in this work during vacations.

At St Andrews'-street Chapel, under the presidency of Rev. T. Graham Tarn, a meeting was held on Wednesday evening in connection with the Student Volunteer Movement. Mr. Crayden Edmonds (St. John's) dealt with the need of the work among the vast masses of heathen population in India, Africa, and China. Mr. A. T. Watts (Peterhouse) dwelt upon the encouragements in the work (1) What God has already done among the heathen (instancing the complete conversion of the Fiji Islanders to God; (2) the promises of help in the work to be found in Scripture; (3) and the thought that it is within our power to fulfil them. Mr. Norman Bennet (Trinity) at the close made an earnest appeal for volunteers. There was an encouraging attendance.

The Christmas Holidays.

Dear Sir,—I shall feel much obliged if you will allow me to inform your readers in the neighbourhood of London, that Mr. E. T. M. Dennes has kindly placed his services at the disposal of the committee of the Children's Special Service Mission for the month of January next, in order to give magic lantern lectures on the "Pilgrim's Progress," or other subjects to young people during the holidays. This has been found in the past a most excellent means of drawing together many of the boys and girls at home from school, and of bringing the Gospel message to many who may perhaps seldom hear it, and no one knows better than Mr. Dennes how to make such meetings thoroughly interesting and spiritually profitable. I shall be very glad to hear from any friends living within an easy distance from town who would like to open their drawing-rooms, and gather their young friends and neighbours together some evening after Christmas for this purpose, and I would send them details of what is proposed.

May I also mention that Mr. Arrowsmith is arranging a special mission for the holidays in North London, and also at Blackheath, and that Mr. Dodderidge will have a similar mission at West Brighton, each will be accompanied by a goodly band of University men.—Yours faithfully, T. B. Bishop.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

At Howard the Y.M.C.A. is taking energetic steps in fitting up its quarters in Holden Chapel.

Mr. James B. Wookey has been giving addresses on "Social Purity" at Y.M.C., Rockford (Ill.).

At Union Christian College, Ind., the attendance at the Association meetings has been very good.

Mr. Sam R. Mabin, of Plymouth, succeeds the late Mr. W. D. Pink as general secretary of the Devonport Y.M.C.A.

Messrs. John MacInnes and Edwyn Barclay have consented to act as honorary assistant secretaries of the Exeter Hall Association.

Rev. J. McCarthy, of the China Inland Mission, has been addressing Y.M.C.A. meetings in Buffalo and other towns in the States.

The Ilfracombe Association is seriously considering the opening of a Seaside Home in what is now a much-frequented watering-place.

The Tract Union at Exeter Hall is still keeping at its work in a quiet persevering way, and the literature it is disseminating doubtless does its silent work in the world.

The annual convention of the South Carolina Associations held lately in a remote place was well attended, and produced many indications that the work is progressing well in the South.

A Northfield club has been organised at Yale for the purpose of uniting all the men who went to Northfield last summer, and to keep alive the interest in the Northfield gathering during the winter.

At Portland, Ore., the religious work is well sustained. Men's gospel meetings on Sunday have an average attendance of two hundred. Sunday morning Bible class has a membership of twenty-five.

At Adelaide progress is reported in all departments, and the interest and membership increase; members are joining the evangelistic workers' band. The attendance at the evangelistic services is increasing.

After a lively discussion, in which many complimentary things were said with respect to the work of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., the Court of Common Council last week made the institution a grant of fifty guineas.

It has been decided by the Association at the University of Pennsylvania to allow students who are members of associations remote from Philadelphia to join the University branch free of charge, upon presentation of their membership cards.

The Gospel meetings in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Ilfracombe continue to attract good numbers at the Boys' Brigade Drill Hall, Quay Place. During the hours of Divine service in the evening, one or two members walk through the town giving out slips of invitation, with very encouraging results.

In Wisconsin two lumbermen secretaries have lately travelled with horse and cutter 864 miles, visited 101 camps, met with 3,593 men, held sixty meetings, distributed fifty Bibles and Testaments, their labours resulting in eleven woodsmen professing conversion, and many requesting prayers. Less than fifty professed Christians were met with. The tent work during the summer has been productive of great good.

Mrs. Van Zuilecom, of 64, Sterndale-road, West Kensington, urges the need of a Y.M.C.A. building at Chudderghaut, India, where Gen. A. E. Campbell is working amongst young men. She writes:—"Parents in England scarcely realise the intense need of such a work in India. Young men, some of them from Godly homes, are drifting away from want of a Christian Association to take them by the hand and help them. In many places there is an entire absence of all religious services."

The Young Men's Review well remarks—"Young men get drunk, yet we seldom hear of very vigorous temperance work being attempted by the Y.M.C.A.'s of the country. Possibly the reason lies in this, that the young men associated with our Associations are in almost all cases temperate young men, so far as alcoholic liquors are concerned. It seems to me, however, that there is considerable room for improvement in this way; all young men are not total abstainers; a good many of them spend far more money than they can afford in alcoholic drinks. This being the case, there is room for actual zealous work in this direction."

The half-yearly meeting of the English National Council, held at Exeter Hall on Friday evening last, celebrated the close of ten years' work. The first meeting of the Council was held at Birmingham, in December, 1882, when there were 188 associations in England, Ireland, and Wales, and 316 including Scotland. Now, in the English union, which comprises Ireland and Wales, there are over 400 associations, and the work is represented at over 500 centres. This is very largely the result of the direct operations of the Council, through their agents travelling over the entire country, developing the work in new centres, and bringing about generally a greatly improved organisation.

DR. L. W. MUNHALL.

Twelve churches in Chester, Pa. (five Methodist, three Presbyterian, one Episcopal, one Baptist, one Lutheran, and one Heavenly Recruit's), have joined in a four weeks' evangelistic campaign, under the direction of Messrs. Munhall and Birch. The work was greatly blessed of God. Many hundreds were saved, and hundreds besides were quickened who had "the form of godliness without the power." The whole city was stirred. The Christians made a canvass of the city, going out "two and two," from house to house.

The meetings were held in an Armoury that would seat twelve hundred. Many times it would not hold the people, when overflow meetings were held in the First Presbyterian and Madison-street M.E. Churches.

The meeting for young people between twelve and twenty-five years of age was a most extraordinary gathering. Quite 200 of them confessed Jesus as Saviour. The meeting for youths and young men only between fourteen and thirty was also a wonderful meeting. Fifty-four of them publicly avowed their faith in Jesus as Saviour. Fifteen hundred women crowded the Armoury at a meeting for women only, and hundreds beside were turned away unable to get in.

Mr. Munhall gave an hour to the students of Crozer (Baptist) Theological Seminary, addressing them in the chapel of the seminary on "How to study and use the English Bible, and do personal soul-saving work." These students were of great help in the Armoury meetings. By invitation of Colonel Hyath, the president, Mr. Munhall addressed the students of Chester Military College. A number of these students confessed Jesus as Saviour.

Finsbury Park Y.M.C.A.

A missionary conversazione was held under the auspices of this association on Friday, Dec. 2, the host being Mr. W. H. Seagram. Many interesting curios were on view from different parts of the foreign mission field, and in the inspection of these, and the enjoyment of tea and talk, the time was pleasantly spent until 8 o'clock, when Mr. Seagram took the chair, supported by Mr. R. C. Morgan, president of the association, and Mr. R. Denis Browne and the secretary. The chairman expressed his pleasure at being present at such a gathering, and emphasised the fact that the best preparation for work abroad was faithful self-denying work at home.

Mr. Arbuthnot, of the C.M.S. Lay Helpers' Union, detailed the circumstances which led to the opening up of mission work in Uganda. He was followed by Rev. T. Brockway, of the L.M.S., who gave a graphic account of his work in Madagascar, making special reference to the way in which the Word of God, given to the natives in their own language, was quick and powerful to their conversion. Mr. Marcus Wood, of the China Inland Mission, then delivered an earnest address on China, where he had laboured for eight years. The audience, composed entirely of men, showed none of the usual signs of restlessness though the hour was late, and after a few words from Mr. Morgan on personal consecration, the meeting was brought to a close. Then a large number gathered round Mr. Brockway while he exhibited a quantity of native pictures. Such a gathering and such addresses cannot fail to stir up real enthusiasm in the cause of foreign missions, and we trust that the results will, in God's own time, be abundantly manifest.

FACTORY LADS' CHRISTIAN HOME AND INSTITUTE.—The fourth annual meeting of this work, superintended by Mr. F. E. Markham, was held a few days ago in the Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill, Mr. H. Harben presiding. An abstract of the report was read by Dr. Evershed, who stated that, although so recently established, the institute has on its muster roll young fellows who are rapidly growing into men, with the brightest prospects before them. Last year was an anxious one, and the income only just met the expenditure. Sympathetic words were spoken by Rev. Z. B. Woffendale and Mr. J. A. Groom.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.—Many kind friends (says Mrs. Spurgeon in The Sword and the Trowel) will like to be assured that my special work—the Book Fund—is thriving grandly, by the evident blessing of God upon it. The treasury is still well filled; and since my return from Mentone, I have been working with increased zeal to make up for the interruption of that sorrowful season last year, when [illegible]'s suffering condition claimed all my [illegible]. Now he is with God, I have, more than ever, time, and reason, and incentive to devote myself to the service which has always been so dear [illegible].

IRISH NOTES.

Rev. Jas. M. Granahan, late of Larne, has entered on his duties as co-pastor with Dr. Johnston, of the important Presbyterian Church, Townsend-street, Belfast.

As the outcome of the recent Evangelistic services an Out-and-Out Band, which already numbers about fifty members, has been formed in Agnes-street Methodist Church, Belfast.

On Sunday week, the annual sermons on behalf of temperance were preached in all the Methodist churches, and last Sunday similar sermons were preached in all the Presbyterian churches.

The general committee which had charge of the arrangements for Mr. Moody's mission in Belfast held its final meeting last week, when it was found that after meeting all expenses there was £100 in hand. This amount it was determined to hand over to the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland.

A Presbyterian temperance conference has been held at Cumber, near Derry, at which resolutions were adopted urging the formation of a temperance association in each congregation, the giving of temperance instruction to the young in day and Sunday-schools, and the exhorting of all engaged in the traffic to give it up.

The year now closing has proved that it is possible to work successfully among Irish Roman Catholics without exciting their prejudices or hurting their feelings. Copies of The Catholic have penetrated into every corner of the land, and have been read by clerics and laity. The Editor has gone wherever duty called him, travelled by night and by day, trusted his life a thousand times to Roman Catholic hands, and not a hair of his head has been touched. He has conducted meetings for Roman Catholics, and he conducts them still, in a hall off one of the most frequented streets in Dublin. Numbers of Roman Catholics have attended every meeting, have listened with the greatest attention, have invariably returned, and many of them are now rejoicing in the liberty of the children of God.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Relief work is being carried on among the Glasgow unemployed.

The Glasgow police are taking active steps for the suppression of lotteries at bazaars.

The Scottish Coast Mission has workers among seafaring people at fifteen fishing stations.

Rev. R. H. Smith, Congregational minister, Duncanstone, N.B., has resigned his charge owing to failing health.

Dr. James Johnston wrote to The Scotsman from Lake Nyassa on Sept. 12 that he expected soon to be homeward bound.

Rev. Mr. Fairweather, of Kinfauns, Perthshire, is to receive a call to the Presbyterian Church at Regent-square, London.

A conference of pastors and office bearers was recently held in Kirkcaldy on how to reach the young and the working classes.

The Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland has lately added twelve to the list of its protégés, some of them children of seamen lost in the Roumania.

The Glasgow auxiliary of the McAll Mission held its anniversary last week. It was reported that £1,550 had been subscribed in the district during the year.

The Leith Christian Fellowship Union has been in existence for twenty-three years. It embraces eighteen associations, with 736 members. The Union maintains a missionary in China.

Rev. John McNeill addressed a large gathering of students at Oddfellows' Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday evening. From the story of Naaman the leper he brought out many practical exhortations bearing on the life of to-day.

At a meeting of the Edinburgh Diocesan Temperance Society a motion was made declaring that the scheme of the Bishop of Chester for dealing with the liquor traffic deserved the favourable consideration of the Legislature. This was met by an amendment that the scheme was unsound in principle and not calculated to secure national sobriety and morality. The amendment was carried by a large majority.

One of the city missionaries in Edinburgh who has charge of about the poorest and most densly populated parts of the Old Town, states that out of 600 families in his district 200 belong to the Roman Catholic Church, and regularly attend worship, while of the remaining 400 about 70 per cent. never enter a church door. The leading causes of this indifference are intemperance and irregular employment.

THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER, addressing a public meeting in that city, said he could not agree with the Bishop of Chester's licensing proposals, although his scheme was better than the existing system.

Temperance Notes.

One hundred and twenty-four pledges were recently taken at Falmouth, as the result of a very successful temperance mission conducted by Mr. J. T. Barker.

In connection with the Grimsby branch of the B.W.T.A., a series of very interesting and successful gatherings has been held, addressed by Miss Hoddinott.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard began their winter campaign last week. Conferences are to be held in the various large centres in the north.

At the annual meeting of the Edinburgh branch of the B.W.T.A., held lately, Miss Wigham, the secretary, reported that during the year the branches of the Association in Scotland had been increased from sixty-five to 110.

The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, organised in 1883 in America, has had a most marvellous growth, and at its last Convention, held in Boston, forty countries were represented, which had established its work in their borders.

Ganja, a drug produced from the leaves, flowers, and portions of the stem of the hemp plant, treated in a peculiar way, appears to be doing a large amount of harm in Bengal. To its use can be traced many of the worst crimes in Lower Bengal.

The Hornsey Watch Committee have successfully summoned a local publican for supplying drink to a constable on duty, in spite of an application from the brewers (the real owners) for an adjournment to enable them to find another tenant—a "dodge" often resorted to to shield the owners.

The anniversary meeting in connection with the Keighley and District Band of Hope Union organisation were initiated on Sunday by a series of special Gospel temperance services in many of the local places of worship, and a crowded public meeting in the large hall of the Mechanics' Institute.

At a recent meeting of the Sunderland Board of Guardians, attention was called by the vice-chairman to the increasing number of able-bodied people sent to the workhouse owing to drunken habits. His idea was that they should have an inebriates' home to be supported by a rate levied upon the public-house interest.

Dr. F. R. Lees, referring to the recent proposal of the Bishop of Chester, roundly condemned it, inasmuch as it entirely failed to address itself to the cause of the evils, physical and moral, which the drink trade brought upon the nation. Nor had he any liking for the Gothenburg system, which, according to those who had had opportunities of noting its operation, had proved unsatisfactory.

At Sunderland Miss Anna Gordon and Miss Alys Smith will hold a meeting for the Young Women's Temperance Union, and Miss Willard will address a meeting of day school teachers, convened at Middlesbro', during the week. Miss Willard's valuable help in this department of work will greatly aid the efforts of those who desire to see temperance instruction given in every school in England.

In the course of a temperance sermon in Rochdale, on Sunday week, Rev. E. A. Davies said that the Prince of Wales would not allow a public-house on his estate at Sandringham. In one cottage he was told by the mistress that her husband used to be given to drink, but since he had been living there, and away from the temptation of the public-house, he was a sober man, and her home was a happy one.

In connection with the annual meeting of the Manchester Church of England Temperance Society, Miss Gertrude Jackson gave an address on "Women's Influence upon the Temperance Question." She would like some of the girls who were growing up to womanhood to come face to face with the question of drink among the working classes. Miss Agnes Wilson next spoke upon "Temperance Work Among Women."

At a meeting, in connection with the B.W.T.A., recently held at Leamington, one of the speakers remarked that the reason why so much drunkenness exists amongst domestic servants is that mistresses are so regardless of their servants' morals by permitting them to indulge in alcoholic stimulants, and by using them in the kitchen, giving cooks and maids a liking for alcoholic drinks. She implored all to banish drink from their houses, and thus help to diminish the besetting sin of so many servants.

Speaking at Wood Green last week, Rev. G. A. Bennetts said the drink traffic was an awful whirlpool in the midst of the world, swamping into its terrible abyss millions of the human race. Looked at from the physical standpoint there were one thousand persons swept into their graves every year by its direct influences, and another thousand by its indirect influences. But the physical effects were nothing to the social and moral ones. If only the drink traffic were banished, all the industrial problems of the times would cease to exist, and the great causes of social and moral disorder be at once removed.

The Book World.

A NEW CHRISTOLOGY.

The Visible God. By Rev. William Marshall. Second edition. (6s. Hodder and Stoughton.) Independent thinkers will revel in this book; others will do well to leave it alone. Reverent in tone, loyal to Scripture, clear and definite in statement, it is nevertheless so bold and original as to puzzle the many. Amongst other points, it sets forth what is practically a new conception of the person of Christ. The author claims that the Post-Apostolic Church missed the true doctrine as set forth by the Apostles, and that we have been misled in consequence. His teaching may be expressed thus:—

In the beginning God was; alone, in the uncreated heaven of his own glory—alone, but not solitary; for God is triune. Before creation, this Trinity was invisible; while, since the beginning of creation and for evermore, both the Father and the Spirit remain invisible. Prior to creation, and for creative and mediatorial ends, the Son became the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation. As such He had a form which was visible, real, and human. The Father and the Spirit had their visibility in Him, for "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

Mr. Marshall maintains that it was in this form that he walked and talked with Adam, Abraham, Moses, Joshua, and others; and that this was no mere appearance of a man, temporarily assumed, but was his own proper form, as truly as his appearances after his resurrection were in his proper body. Further, this form is human. If man was made in his likeness, then the original and the copy were alike. The author argues from Scripture that every appearance of the Second Person of the Trinity is that of a man, and challenges anyone to show evidence that this human form was merely assumed.

We do not criticise this teaching. It is taught with such earnestness, definiteness, and reverence of appeal to Scripture, that it demands a respectful hearing from all qualified to deal with these great matters. We counsel, however, the utmost caution and prayerfulness in the examination of a subject so deep and sacred.

STORY BOOKS.

The Hill of the Angels, by Lily Watson (2s. 6d. R.T.S.), is a clever sketch of literary ambitions and of ultimate success; it will at once amuse and encourage young authors.

Ida's Secret, by Agnes Giberne (2s. 6d. J. F. Shaw and Co.), is a story with a moral—that wrongdoing, like murder, "will out," though it may sometimes be overruled for good in unexpected ways.

Maia, by J. Ottilie V. Jacoby (Elliot Stock), is a cleverly-conceived tale of the Fatherland, telling of love and war and self-sacrifice. A deep religious tone pervades the narrative, which can be commended on every ground.

Hearts of Oak, by Dr. Gordon Stables (5s. J. F. Shaw and Co.), is a moving story of the sea, intended to illustrate the life and heroic achievements of Nelson. It need scarcely be said that the descriptions of naval scenes and experiences are of the most vivid kind. Boys of an adventurous turn of mind will revel in its pages.

Bob Lovell's Career, by E. S. Ellis (5s. Cassell and Co.), is "a story of American railway life," in which a clever and high-minded young engineer rises rapidly from the post of fireman on a locomotive to the presidency of the railway company. The story has all the elements of "go," brilliant description, and rapid movement that we associate with American fiction. But it is an admirable tale for youths who have to carve their way in the world, and who sometimes forget that fidelity to duty and fearless devotion to truth bring success in life as well as secure an approving conscience.

All's Well, by Emily Holt (3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw and Co.), is a charmingly-told tale of the persecuting times of three and a-half centuries ago. We wonder how many of us in these easy-going days would prove as faithful to God and to conscience, should the need arise, as Mistress Benden, the heroine of the tale, who not only endured sore imprisonment, but sealed her testimony at the stake at Canterbury? Miss Holt's portrayal of men and manners and the quaint speech of our forefathers is as fascinating as ever, while her industry is phenomenal. A story like this is worth a cart-load of the novels that are mostly in vogue at our circulating libraries.

Tales for the Twilight Hour. Under this distinctive heading The Religious Tract Society are publishing a series of narratives specially suitable for the leisure reading of young men and women. Our Street, by Leslie Keith (3s.), records the simple annals of a middle-class suburban street, showing how happiness and true brotherliness are independent of worldly status or possession. The Shadow on the Hearth, by Rev. T. S. Millington (3s.), carries its lesson of clear warning against unequal yoking in marriage in matters religious; and at the same time unfolds some of the inner workings of the Romish system as it produces social discord. Half-brothers, by Hesba Stretton (5s.), gives a glimpse into an intricate family history, with the play and counterplay of conflicting interests. The gifted author knows how to depict social life so as to satisfy the canons of literary art and yet bring about a proper dénouement. These tales are all of a high order.

The Hidden Hand, the striking exposure of the Romish apostasy, issued by Marshall Brothers (3d.), has reached a fourth edition, completing 63,000. The contents include a statement of the cause and remedy of the sorrows of Ireland.

Cassell's Family Magazine has a world-wide reputation as an entertaining and useful periodical. The annual volume (9s. Cassell and Co.) contains six complete serial stories and thirty shorter ones, all by popular authors. One of the most attractive departments is that headed "The Gatherer," under which are grouped hundreds of interesting facts and novelties of invention. The volume contains about four hundred illustrations, and is a treasury of information on cookery, gardening, health, dress, and other domestic matters. It would be welcome as a Christmas present in many a home.

Farthings, by Mrs. Molesworth. (3s. 6d. Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co.) A capital story of a waif (really there are two of them in it) written with a purpose, and that purpose the arousing of wide interest in the rescue of waifs and strays. Even apart from this, the book is really interesting and fresh. From the same house we have also A Pair of Old Shoes, by Crystal Coleridge (1s.). A simple but telling story of rural life, both in farmhouse and rectory. My Birthday Book, edited by Mary Trebeck (6d.), prepared expressly for the members of the G.F.S., but well adapted to all girls.

Two beautiful booklets are published by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster, containing some of the last utterances of the late C. H. Spurgeon. Peace, Perfect Peace, is "a talk in a sick room at Mentone," and forms a very choice bit of practical exhortation based on the well-knownhymn by Bishop Bickersteth. Each couplet in the hymn suggests most helpful and comforting thoughts. Breaking the Long Silence is the title of notes of two short addresses by Mr. Spurgeon on the last evening of 1891 and the first morning of 1892. The booklets show that the spiritual vigour and insight of the great preacher were undiminished to the very close of life.

Christmas Cards and Calendars in choice variety have been issued by Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N. Among the most highly finished cards are "Waters of Quietness," with texts and original series by Lily Oakley; and "His Presence," with verses by Charlotte Murray, both in packets of six for a 1s. Others are of tasteful design, with suitable lines by F. R. Havergal, H. Bonar, and M. A. Chaplin (6d. for packets of six). These may be had adapted either for Christmas or the New Year; as also may series of autograph cards, and others of a cheaper kind. The "ruby" mottoes for 1893 are very attractive, and suitable for localisation by churches and missions. Among the calendars are:—The "Art Ruby" (4d.), the "Guiding Hand" (6d.), and the "Holly Spray" (1s.), the last being handsomely blocked in silver.

The Perpetual Presence: By W. Monro Collings: a useful booklet issued by Drummond's Tract Depôt (1s. per doz.) specially helpful for circulation at the New Year.

The World-wide Communicants Union card, designed to assist Christian union, and promote prayer and praise to God, is a sound and cheerful publication. Copies may be had (6s. per hundred) from Rev. G. Dobree, St. John's Vicarage, Worksop.

Protestant Reformation Society.

Arrangements have been made for a monthly prayer meeting, open to all friends of this society, to be held in the committee-room, 20, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W. The first meeting will be held on Friday, December 30, at 3.30 p.m., conducted by Rev. W. R. Mowll, Vicar of Christ Church, North Brixton.

The object of these meetings is to give the friends of the society an opportunity of uniting in earnest prayer for the agents of the society, that God may support them in their difficult work, and abundantly bless their efforts for the salvation of souls. The society, now in its sixty-fifth year, is anxious if possible to open new stations in several of our large towns.

The society has a two-fold aim: 1, the salvation of Roman Catholics through the one only Mediator, Jesus Christ; 2, the preservation of Protestants who are in danger of being perverted to the Church of Rome. One of the most important duties of the missionaries is to visit Roman Catholics in their homes, and especially those inquiring after truth, and to rescue Protestant children from Romish schools. Another is to hold Protestant educational classes for the instruction of the young.

Notices.

An Old Reader asks in what collection she may find a long hymn (different from the one in "Sacred Songs and Solos") beginning with the words "God is Earnest," and every verse opening in a similar way.

Appeals.

Cheriton, Alresford.—A worker in this rural district where the majority of the congregation earn about 12 shillings a week, pleads for help in procuring a stove in the chapel. Communications should be made to Theodore Woodman, The Manse, Cheriton, Alresford.

Gibraltar Soldiers' Institute.—The lady-workers ask little articles, suitable for Christmas gifts, to the soldiers on the Rock. Handkerchiefs, pencils, writing paper, and similar things are acceptable. Parcels sent to Colonel H. S. Clarke, Essendene, The Downs, Wimbledon, will be forwarded.

Braintree, Mr. Hider writes, is suffering from the agricultural depression, and it is painful to see aged Christian people cowering over a little heap of smouldering embers, and to know that food is as scarce as fuel. Help is asked to supply coals to such.—George Hider, Great Sampford, Braintree.

A Home for Inebriates has been opened at 10, Paddenswick-road, Ravenscourt Park, W. £100 is needed to complete furnishing the house, which will be partly supported by freewill offerings during the first year, after which it is hoped it will be self-supporting. Further particulars from the secretary, at the above address.

Union Hall Mission.—Mr. Robert Bilbe writes:—Our financial position is such as to cause the deepest anxiety. Although we have been enabled to maintain the mission for thirty-three years, in the midst of the poor of this great city, we have never been so severely tried for funds as we are now. We purpose giving dinners and teas to the poor in Christmas week. We shall open a special fund, and I ask kind friends to state in their communications to which object they desire their gifts placed, "for the General Funds of the Mission," or the "Poor Fund."

FOUR YOUNG MISSIONARIES bade farewell to their friends at the Wesleyan Chapel, Tottenham, last week, prior to departure for China in connection with the "Joyful News" Mission, founded by Rev. Thomas Champness (formerly a missionary in West Africa), whose son formed one of the present party. The four young men go to take the places of two missionaries, one of whom died of smallpox, and the other was murdered at Wuhsneh last year. There are now ten "Joyful News" evangelists in the Celestial Empire.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 11.—RUTH IV.

It was a rare lot for the Gentile maiden to have her case taken in hand by Boaz, the wealthy landowner of Bethlehem. To be his wife, and to realise that his inheritance was hers—this must have sent a thrill of bliss through her heart, whilst the daughters of Bethlehem were filled with envy and chagrin. But, after all, this raising up of the poor out of the dust to sit with princes is not to be named in comparison with the still more surprising fact in which each believer who reads these lines has a share. That we, who were not a people, should become the people of the living God, is much; but that is not all; we have become the Bride of Christ, and are joint-heirs with Him of his unsearchable riches.

Our Boaz pleads our cause in the gate, and what the law could not do, in that it was unable to redeem, our great kinsman has done. And as the transference of the shoe indicated the transference of authority and property, so has all right and power over us passed into the hands of Jesus, who alone has a supreme claim over us. We are his. His because of his near kinship; his because He has fulfilled the law and possessed Himself of all legal right to us; his because He has redeemed us. Sooner might Ruth have thought of being unfaithful to Boaz, than we to Him.

And so, if we will wait for the end of the Lord, we shall always find that He justifies his dealings with his people. At first his hand seems against us. But it is only on account of our unbelief and disobedience. When we return to Him He begins to work our help and cure.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 12.—1 SAMUEL I.

The bitter grief of Hannah at her childlessness did for her what similar anguish should always do. It drove her to God. There she found her only resource. When the heart is nigh to breaking, what else can we do than pour out our complaint into that tender and compassionate ear which is ever open to our cry. No human love can really allay our anguish as God can, though it may afford welcome solace, as Elkanah's to his much-loved wife. We turn from it, as well as from the scene of feasting, in the bitterness of our soul. Then we offer our prayers and tears to God, and He inclines unto us and hears our cry, and brings us up out of the horrible pit, and from among the miry clay.

What a sweet specimen of secret fellowship is here! Many were coming and going in the court of the Tabernacle. There was no place for private prayer. The broken heart had no opportunity of audible petition: "she spake in her heart." We may all do that when amid the crowds that sweep us along in their busy current. And let us not grow weary; "she continued praying before the Lord." If there is abundance of complaint and provocation, let there be abundance of supplication. The overcharged spirit will not need to defend its case with men, if it has committed it to God. And when once the burden is rolled off on God, the peace of God fills the heart. We go away in assured faith, and eat, and our countenances are no more sad. And God does not fail. What we have asked of God should be given to God, devoted to his service, and held as his trust.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 13.—1 SAMUEL II.

Oh, those notes of ecstasy, which were to start David and Mary and many others singing! So the song of a bird will set the whole woodland ringing with feathered minstrelsy. We remember not our anguish for joy. The time is not far away for thee to take thy harp from the willow, and draw from it such music as will penetrate many another soul with trust. How full of the Lord this song is! Throughout, the overflowing heart ascribes its rapture to the Rock of Ages. He saves: He is holy: He knows: He weighs: He kills and makes alive: He brings down to the grave, and brings up: poverty and wealth, depression and exaltation, the keeping of the feet and the communication of strength, are his, and He will vindicate those that trust Him.

How needful that we lay to heart the motto, "By strength shall no man prevail." We have often tried by expediency or energy to get our way. In vain! To rise up early and sit up late will not effect our purpose. But to yield to God, to learn his lessons, to be submissive and gentle, to pray and trust and wait—thus we prevail. The Lord gives strength, and position, and success. We conquer by yielding; we gain by giving; He gives to his beloved as they sleep; in quietness and confidence shall be our strength.

What a contrast between the sweet God-appointed child priest, and the priest of title and descent! On the one God's favour rested, giving him favour with man; but the others had already committed the sin concerning which it is impossible to utter the prayer of faith (25 R.V., 1 John v. 16). And God did more than Hannah had asked or thought.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 16.—1 SAMUEL III.

Sweet story memorable to childhood. How many dear children have learnt from thee to listen for the voice of God! Thou hast filled many a young sleeper with dream of the voice of God, and made the night shine even as the day. But thou hast a message for us all and ever. We may not as yet look for the open vision, but we may listen to the voice of God speaking within, in the temple of the heart. Many a time He calls us by our name, and we think it to be the echo of our own consciousness or the summons of a friend. We need the anointed ear, become familiar with the accents of that still small voice, as Mary was with Christ's, when He called her by her name. We must know the Lord, and then the Word of the Lord will be revealed to us.

Have we not lain on beds of sloth, long after that voice has bidden us awake? Have not our spirits been lulled into fatal stupor by some lethargy or opiate, so that we have been disobedient to the heavenly voice or vision? What wonder is it that other instruments are selected to do work which we might have done, and that others receive revelations of the will of God which we might have caught and transmitted? First we should say: Here am I; next: Speak, Lord.

The delicacy of Samuel in trying to spare Eli's feelings, and the old man's resignation are very beautiful. What better can we say as we hear the heavy tidings that at times must needs be spoken? It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 15.—1 SAMUEL IV.

They thought that the presence of the ark of God must bring deliverance. It was like the fetish of the savage, the charm of the ignorant. No ark, however sacred its associations, could undo the effect of Israel's departure from God or cancel the result of disastrous sins in the family of Eli. It is thus that our evil hearts still seek to evade the consequences of their wrong-doing, and to escape the necessity of putting wrong right. We resort to prayer, to vows of consecration, to strenuous resolutions, to sacraments and rituals, to ceremonialism and priestcraft. But all to no avail. If we regard iniquity in our heart, the Lord does not hear our prayer. To obey is better than sacrifice, to hearken than the fat of lambs. If you are in trouble, or constantly overcome by your sins, the Philistines of your soul, it will be well to go to the very root and cause of all in the departure of your soul from God.

The sons of Eli must be discerned and judged and put away, and the soul must be true in its allegiance to that faithful Priest, who does according to that which is in God's heart and mind. Only so will the rites and ordinances of God's house be of any avail. The end of Eli and the wife of Phinehas were very tragic. But there is a beautiful touch, in the case of each, of devotion to the cause of God. Eli did not succumb till the messenger made mention of the capture of the ark; and the new-born babe could not rally the mother from her death-swoon, since she accounted that Israel's glory departed when the sacred symbol of their faith had passed into the hands of their foes. In each case there was an absorption in the interests of the cause of God, which is full of instruction. Let us look at all things in the light of God's glory, and let our soul be on fire with holy ardour for the success of the kingdom of Emmanuel.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 16.—1 SAMUEL V.

The Ark was a type of Christ. He is the propitiatory that covers the law, and on which, blood-besprinkled, the eyes of the cherubim are fixed. It was meet and right that Dagon, the tutelary deity of Philistia, should do Him homage by falling flat on the ground before the emblem of his presence. As the Apostle says, the heathen sacrifice to demons, and not to God. Behind Dagon therefore there was some evil spirit, who through the hideous idol dominated and possessed the inhabitants of Philistia. And thus there was the obeisance of one emblem to another in that old temple, the sign and seal of a yet mightier conflict which was in process between the Son of God, and the Prince of the Power of the Air. Already Satan was falling as lightning from heaven, and there were portents and presages of his being cast out.

Whilst the children of Israel looked upon the Ark as sure to bring them deliverance, it failed them; but this was not to be construed into any preference on the part of God for the men of Philistia, for as soon as it came into their borders it brought them terrible plagues. With the froward God shows himself froward. What we are toward God, determines the aspect of his dealings with us.

If in our hearts there is some Dagon idol, before which we have prostrated ourselves, let us bring in the Ark of the God of Israel. Surely no evil thing can stand against the entrance of the Redeemer. It must fall down before Him, and be broken. Those who cannot cast down Dagon before introducing the Ark, should introduce the Ark, and Dagon will fall down by himself. The idols He shall utterly abolish.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17.—1 SAMUEL VI.

The story of the deliverance from Egypt had spread the fame of God throughout all these countries, and especially lived in the hearts of the priests and diviners. They, at least, knew "the Lord He was God." But, like all of us, by nature they were disposed to think that He could be propitiated by gifts of gold, rather than by the sacrifices of a broken heart. This making a golden image of the causes of their suffering, is of a piece with our habit of dwelling upon the secondary causes of our sorrows, rather than to dealing with the heart-evil that may have caused them.

God's power was evident in making these kine take a road foreign to their maternal instincts, and whenever God's hand is at work it shows itself in accomplishing what is above nature. There is no greater proof of the reality of the Gospel story than that description of the Lord Jesus given in the four Gospels, which is so unlike the national Jewish conception; and there is no stronger evidence of the work of God in the human heart than that it makes us act in direct opposition to our natural impulses. The flesh may sometimes yearn for the opposite, as the kine lowed for their calves, but the spirit abates not an hairbreadth in its steady course. However weak the flesh, our true self wills only the will of God.

It was a strange sight, that new cart with its burden, the Ark, and the gold trinkets—the oxen swayed by a power they could not understand; yet similar spectacles are to be witnessed every day, when new hearts yield themselves to God to bear forward his cause. Heart and flesh fail, but God is the strength of the heart, and his Spirit bears us forward we know not how or whither.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 18.
REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Acts xxviii. 28.

VERY few notes are needed for this review. The quarter's lessons abound in interesting narratives, which the scholars are supposed to have learned.

The Golden Text contains two assertions, viz.:—That the Gospel is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they are willing to hear it. Both these facts appear in the narratives of this series.

The first lesson tells of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, who was chosen to be the apostle of the Gentiles (ix. 15). By questioning, elicit the facts of the narrative, and show the power of the grace of God in so speedily changing a violent persecutor into an obedient servant.

In the next five lessons, Peter comes into view mainly as the first among the apostles to preach to the Gentiles (chapter x.). See that the scholars have learned the name of the first Gentile convert, the city where he abode, and the remarkable circumstances by which he and Peter were brought together. This story bears witness to the fact that the wall of partition is broken down (x. 34, 43).

The formation of the first Gentile Church affords opportunity for further questioning: Where formed? Who were the first preachers? And by whom was Saul introduced to the Church (xi. 19—30)? See how wonderfully God works. First, by the conversion of the apostle to the Gentiles; then, while Saul is being prepared for his work, opening the door of the Gentiles by the preaching of Peter; and then forming a Gentile Church at Antioch, from which missionaries to the Gentiles may afterwards be sent forth. The lessons appear like so many stories, in which different persons appear working without much knowledge of each other, but a more careful view enables us to see God at work through his servants in various places to bring about his own purpose of saving the Gentiles.

The story of the first apostle martyr, and of the futile attempt to kill Peter, followed by the terrible death of the cruel persecutor (chap. xii.), instructs us concerning the strength and the weakness of God's enemies, and the different ways in which God deals with his servants.

Trace upon a map the course taken by the apostles in their first missionary journey, and question as to the incidents which occurred at each place, and the results of the work (xiii., xiv.)

There are two Antiochs mentioned in this series—can the scholars distinguish between them? And two persons named James—which was the apostle? and who was the other?

In the golden text, as throughout these lessons, the Gentiles who received the Gospel are placed in contrast with the Jews who rejected it. The most important question for each one is, Have you received it or not? It is possible to condemn the Jews for their folly, and to be equally foolish ourselves. It is possible to approve the wisdom of the Gentiles while not imitating their faith.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY,

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT,

LONDON, E.C.

LONG, dark, and dreary evenings for the poor and destitute, with their cold chilling blasts, are once more upon us, calling forth the increased efforts of all Christian philanthropists in seeking to combat with the misery and suffering wrought by sin, poverty, ignorance, and other causes.

Such efforts are nowhere more needed than in seeking the rescue of poor outcast women, or the salvation of girls in danger of becoming so.

During the year the work of this Society has been extended.

1. By the opening of another Home for 21 girls.
2. By the appointment of a fresh female missionary, whose chief work shall be out-of-doors,

Nine Homes are now maintained, including a Maternity Home and a Lock Hospital.

250 girls and young women can be accommodated at the same time.

15,753 have already been helped to a life of virtue and happiness since the Society was established in 1853.

OF THIS NUMBER 548 WERE AIDED LAST YEAR.

This year we have largely exceeded the usual number, 587 having already been benefited in our Homes up to November 28th.

During recent months the receipts have been far below the expenditure, and we are in urgent need of immediate help.

£1,200 wanted before December 31st.

Contributions may be forwarded to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; to the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, & Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A MEMORIAL fund is being raised for the family of the late Prebendary Tilney Bassett, of Dulverton.

The Vicar of Leeds, Dr. Talbot, has been lecturing at Sheffield on "The True Strength of Christian Evidences."

Evangelical Churchism is by no means in decadence in Wakefield, as shown by the successful work at Holy Trinity and some other churches.

The Dean of Rochester announces that, at his age, he can no longer undertake outside work; Cathedral and diocesan duties must occupy all his time.

The Stepney Training College for Workers, opened by the S.P.C.K. in 1889, has been doing useful work, as was shown by the Bishop of London at the annual meeting held last week.

The Intelligencer learns with regret that Rev. W. A. Rice, of Peshawur, has had a bad illness. He was improving satisfactorily at the date of the last despatches, the middle of October.

Mrs. Charles Turner, the munificent donor of clergy pensions in the dioceses of York and Liverpool, has given £1,000 towards the fund the Bishop of Liverpool is raising for the maintenance of poor Church schools in that city.

Rev. W. Cooper, who has been the vicar of St. Alban's, Rochdale, since 1874, informed his congregation on Sunday that he had sent his resignation to the Bishop of Manchester and Archdeacon Wilson on account of ill-health, and that it had been sympathetically accepted.

The Bishop of Salisbury, opening last week a new mission-hall in connection with St. John's, Salisbury, said they must all work together now, in view of a very great crisis which was certainly approaching in the future—a crisis which would attack the whole fabric of the Church of England.

Rev. J. R. Harmer has been appointed rector of St. Mary Abchurch, in succession to Rev. R. B. Gibson, M.A., whose death took place a few weeks ago. Mr. Harmer, we hear, is an active and earnest clergyman, who may be trusted to make the church a real living force in the neighbourhood.

India's Women, the magazine of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, says that news has come of three baptisms, which took place last September, connected with St. Catherine's Hospital. A young Hindu woman, a Mohammedan girl of fifteen, and a homeless little sweeper girl were received together.

The Sussex Daily News says:—"The Council of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance have just met to consider the question of the proposed amalgamation of certain evangelical organisations. A sub-committee was appointed to discuss the suggested amalgamation with the Union of Clerical and Lay Associations. There is an impression that these two organisations will agree to combine and to carry on their work. If such an arrangement can be carried out, the new organisation will be the largest and most powerful body in the country for watching and guarding evangelical interests in the Church of England.

The Bishop of London, addressing a meeting in Kensington on Wednesday week, said that missionaries went to Uganda with their lives in their hands and at their own peril, but the Government afterwards stepped in and identified themselves with the work, and by their presence created a danger which otherwise might have been avoided. If England had thus compromised herself before the people of that land, he held that there could be no withdrawal from the responsibility incurred, and that England, having entered Uganda, was bound to see before coming away that the missionaries and their converts were at least as safe as they would have been if the Government had never gone there.

The Bishop of Worcester, preaching on Sunday week at St. Saviour's, Hockley, took as the subject of his discourse the parable of the barren fig tree. He asked, Did not the parable apply to the England of the nineteenth century? Was not their own position very much like that of the Jewish nation in the first century? Were they not proud of their churches; of their large congregations; of the elaborateness and pomp of their services; of their frequent Communions? Did not all seem very fair and very beautiful? But did it never occur to them that after all these things might be only leaves and not fruit? Was there no fear lest all this outward pomp of services should usurp the place of the religion of the heart—lest that, in dwelling upon ordinances, they should forget Him who was the life of all ordinances and forget the object for which these ordinances were instituted?

CONGREGATIONAL.

A fruitful mission has just been held at the Tabernacle, Haverfordwest.

Rev. J. Parr, of Fenstanton, has accepted the pastorate of Union Church, Brampton.

Rev. H. Butler has accepted the pastorate of the church at Rothwell, near Kettering.

Rev. D. D. Waters, of Bradford, has accepted the pastorate of Salem Chapel, Wakefield.

Rev. J. E. Brown, M.A., has accepted the pastorate of St. Andrew's Church, North Shields.

New Sunday-schools and a lecture hall have been opened in connection with the church at Freshwater.

Rev. H. Mathews, of Drighlington, after a ministry of over fourteen years, has accepted the pastorate at Fanshaw.

Rev. James Johnston, formerly pastor at Prescott, has accepted the pastorate of Hollins-grove Church, Darwen.

Park Chapel, Camden Town, reports a membership of 460. The sum raised by the church and Sunday-schools for the London Missionary Society amounted last year to £260.

A farewell service was held at Mawdsley-street Church, Bolton, on Sunday week, in connection with the departure to Tutuila, South Pacific, of Rev. E. V. Cooper, of the London Missionary Society.

The Eastern District of Surrey Union held last week its meetings at Ewell. Addresses were given by Rev. A. Wickson, LL.D., on "Evangelistic Methods," and by Mr. J. W. Taylor on "Profitable Preaching."

The 1892-3 series of "The Hamilton Lectures" in connection with Belgrave Congregational Chapel, Leeds, was delivered last week by Rev. Charles A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, the subject being "National Religion."

At Bath-lane Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, a lantern mission is being held for men and women. A large district round the church has been visited, and personal invitations to the services given. At the first meeting nearly a thousand responded.

Rev. Newman Hall, D.D., has undertaken the pastorate for three months of Finsbury Park Church, which has been without a minister since Rev. Eynon Davies removed to Glasgow, a year or more ago. The name of a well-known minister is under the serious consideration of the fellowship, as a probable candidate for the pastorate.

Rev. James Le Pla has been recognised as pastor of Craven Chapel, Regent-street. Rev. Alfred Rowland, B.A., LL.B., in presiding, referred to the past history of the church, and spoke of the altered conditions under which Mr. Le Pla entered on the work established by Dr. Leifchild. He urged the people to give their minister a free hand to adopt any means he might think necessary to reach the people outside the church.

BAPTIST.

The anniversary at Marsh-street, Ashford, Kent, awakened much local interest. The work appears to be prospering.

The autumnal meetings of the Berks Association, just held at Sandhurst, were devoted to earnest consideration of practical work.

A new Baptist chapel has just been opened at Broadstone, near Hebden Bridge. The cost of the building, etc., is about £1550, of which £1430 has been raised.

Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster intend presenting with the January issue of Sword and Trowel a fine photo-print portrait of the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, reproduced from the photograph taken before his fatal illness.

The annual meeting of the South Australian Baptist Association, held at the end of September, showed tokens of advance all round. Ernest attention was given to the "Kanaka traffic," and a strong protest was raised.

The twentieth annual report of the Regent's Park College Preaching Station Society is encouraging, and clearly shows that during the last year a great deal of good work has been done. Amongst the stations supplied have been Aldeburgh, Chalk Farm, Brighton, and Amersham.

On Sunday week eighteen persons were baptized in the pool adjoining the Saron Chapel, Llandebie, by Rev. D. S. Davies, pastor. The crowd that assembled to witness the solemn rite displayed considerable enthusiasm as the preacher dwelt upon the words, "Why baptizest thou?"

On Sunday evening Rev. G. T. Ennals, pastor of Cann Hall-road Church, Leytonstone, E., concluded a series of discourses on the Beatitudes. Covering a wide field of doctrinal instruction and practical counsel, the sermons were listened to with interest and profit by large congregations.

At Shipston-on-Stour the seventh anniversary of Rev. R. T. Lewis' pastorate has been celebrated. The pastor gave a report of work done in connection with village preaching, open-air meetings, Bible-classes, Band of Hope, tract distribution, etc. Forty-two members had been admitted to church fellowship during the seven years. One was studying at Rawdon College with a view to the ministry, and another convert had commenced to preach the Gospel in Canada.

The twelfth united conference of the members of the Tottenham and Keynsham Baptist Churches was held. The interest of these church conferences is well maintained, and they do much to bind the two churches together in mutual friendship and happy fellowship. Mr. Eb. Veale read an instructive paper on "The Sunday-school Work: What is it, and what does it cost?" The meeting was then thrown open for anyone present to speak, and friends readily availed themselves of the opportunity.

The Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool, has just celebrated its twenty-first anniversary. Mr. W. P. Lockhart said that since the church was started they had raised about £35,000, of which £4300 had been given to the foreign missions. This object, he thought, should have the first claim on every Christian man. They had admitted to the church between 1700 and 1800 people, and now had a membership of nearly 700. He thought the best way they could celebrate their majority was to get up a special fund for the foreign missions, and £500 had already been raised for this purpose.

A public tea and meeting was recently held at Prewett-street Mission Hall, Cathay, Bristol, to commemorate the completion of twenty-one years' mission work in Cathay by the pastor, Mr. Samuel Thomas. This work was commenced Nov. 24, 1871, in a cart shed, with a congregation of about twenty persons, and has been the means, in God's hands, of much good in the neighbourhood; it has steadily grown till now there is a church of 250 members, many of whom have been brought to the Lord under the preaching of the pastor, with three mission halls, Sunday-school, and various other agencies.

METHODIST.

New Sunday-schools were opened on Thursday at Lydney by Rev. W. Perkins.

The Mission Band Union is holding to-day a workers' conference at Wardour Hall.

A special mission has just been held in Spittlegate Chapel, Grantham, by Mr. G. Wilkinson.

The Grove Mission, Great Guilford-street, Borough, celebrated on Monday its fourth anniversary.

A new chapel and school, to cost £1,200, are to be erected at Pleasley, Mansfield. A site has been obtained on Sir Harry Verney's property.

Nearly all the scholars in the senior classes at St. Paul's, Guernsey, are said to have been brought to Christ during a ten days' mission led by two lady evangelists.

At Tredegar Mr. Raymond Preston has met with remarkable success. During the first week of a recent mission very nearly 300 are said to have decided for Christ.

At one depôt centre in Wales a weekly Gospel service is held in the regimental theatre, and the soldiers rally round the Methodist workers. Pledges are taken each week, as many as ten at a time.

At the last meeting of the London Mission Committee on Friday, it was stated that the pressure of the congregations at the West Central branch, notably at St. James's Hall, was greater than ever. Conversions were constant, and many of them of a very striking character.

Leicester Methodism is inaugurating a scheme which involves an outlay of £20,000. Two new town chapels and a big mission hall, improvements at Bishop-street and Humberstone-road, two country chapels in the former circuit, an iron chapel at Aylestone-park, and the enlargement of Sunday-schools, are included in this scheme.

Last year, it will be remembered, Mr. W. Argent, a Joyful News evangelist, was murdered at Wusueh. In his place four young men have now gone forth—two to the town in which he was martyred, and two to fill the place of another young missionary, who died some time ago of smallpox. These new men are Messrs. C. S. Champness, W. A. Tatchell, C. Geear, and P. Dempsey.

PRESBYTERIAN.

It is stated that the self-denial week will be observed in about 170 churches, and that applications have been received for nearly 35,000 envelopes for the offerings.

It was reported to the Synod Committee last week that the missions held by Rev. R. Stewart in various parts of the North, and Rev. Dr. Ross in Blyth, have been followed by much blessing.

Rev. R. H. Morgan, secretary of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association, has resigned the pastorate of the English Presbyterian Church at Menai Bridge, with which it has been identified since its establishment.

A medical missionary will be sent to occupy the important city of Ling-Chun, to the north of Chin-Chew, where it is known that the people are eager to welcome him. An anonymous donor has given £1000 to be devoted to this new work.

Rev. J. G. Train preached to a crowded audience his farewell sermon at Prospect-street Church, Hull, on Sunday week, from the words "For of Him, and through Him, and to Him are all things; to whom be glory for ever. Amen" (Rom. xi. 68).

Rev. Theodore Meyer reports regarding the Jewish work at Whitechapel, that since the Synod there have been many as thirty-two inquirers receiving instruction with view to baptism, and that, notwithstanding the open[ing] other halls, and a public library in the immedia[te] bourhood, the attendance at all the meetings continues to increase.

The reception by the Foreign Missions committee at its recent meeting of the missionaries about to proceed to China was a touching scene. The two veterans of the mission—Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, of Swatow, with his record of thirty-one years' service, and Rev. W. Macgregor, of Amoy, now twenty-nine years on the field—were there to say farewell to the committee. So also was Rev. T. Barclay, after eighteen years' work in Formosa, and Dr. Murray Cairns, going out to fill the place left vacant by Dr. Russell, in North Formosa. It is hoped that some reinforcement of the mission staff at Amoy will soon be secured. A missionary is to be sent to Chang-Poo to take up Mr. Gregory's work.

The Presbyterian church at Brockley, and the People's Hall, Deptford, cost in all about £14,000, and as the church is now entirely free, and only a small balance remains on the People's Hall, the congregation have been holding thanksgiving services, in which Drs. Oswald Dykes, Donald Macleod, and Thain Davidson took part. On Thursday week a social meeting was held, when the gathering of past and present members was the largest and most enthusiastic in the history of the congregation. Amongst those who assisted were Professor Skinner, Revs. Robert Taylor, J. Reid Howatt, Wm. Martin, J. H. Thomson, J. R. Patterson, and Hugh Mackenzie, Sir Thomas Crawford, and others.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Bridgend, on 26th ult., Rev. Edward Matthews, for half a century a leading Calvinistic Methodist minister in Wales.—At Winterbourne St. Martin, Rev. E. Ludlow, aged 92, for fifty-five years clergyman in the parish.—At Hazelgrove, Mr. J. Bennison, aged 86, an earnest and beloved Christian.—At Lychett, on 24th ult., Mr. W. Taylor, aged 80, a helper of many.—At Wolverhampton, on 24th ult., after three years' trying illness, Mrs. Drummond, wife of the pastor of Queen-street Chapel.—At Liverpool, on 25th ult., Mr. W. Merrylees, aged 77, a Christian worker for many years, who, with his wife, was amongst the passengers saved from the wreck of the Liverpool steamship Orion on the Ayrshire coast in 1850.—At Liverpool, Mr. John Robertson, for twenty-five years Sunday-school Superintendent at Rodney-street Scotch Church.—At Bury St. Edmunds, Mr. George Nice, aged 81, a consistent and active member of the Christian Church.—At Gwennap, on 22nd ult., Rev. F. Russell, in the fifty-second year of his ministry.—At Tooting, Mr. James Howarth, after being knocked down by a cab in Westminster, a devout and devoted Christian, and a leader in Methodist work.—At Eastbourne, on 26th ult., Mr. Francis Bourdillon, aged 74, known and beloved by many.—At Deal, on 26th ult., Rev. J. B. Parker, M.A., the rector of St. Andrews.—At Tunbridge Wells, on 26th ult., Rev. J. N. Woodroffe, M.A., aged 83, for many years an active and influential clergyman in Glamire and Cork.—Rev. William Fulton, 79 years of age, and for over twenty years minister of the Baptist church in Airdrie.

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

POPLAR.—Rev. R. D. Wilson would be thankful for help in providing free meals for the destitute unemployed and their children, who are in a sad condition. Address, Trinity Parsonage, Poplar, E.

DOCKHEAD.—Rev. J. C. Carlile writes from 30, Reverdy-road, Bermondsey, pleading the cause of the destitute children, who are many of them in a heart-rending condition. Gifts of secondhand clothing would also be welcome.

HOLBORN.—Rev. H. Thomas, minister of Kingsgate-street Baptist Church, finds much poverty in and around Clare Market, and would be thankful for aid in relieving and cheering the distressed. Mr. Thomas should be addressed at the chapel, as above.

THE SURGICAL PROVIDENT APPLIANCE SOCIETY is very greatly and sorely in need of financial help, and has had consequently to refuse many very pitiful cases for the appliances they sorely need. The secretary is Thomas Woodrow, 12, Finsbury-circus, E.C.

CLAPTON.—Rev. T. Jackson, 41, Powerscourt-road, Clapton, E., says: We have a large number of unemployed in Clapton and Homerton, and much consequent distress and privation. We are in urgent need of funds to enable us to give food and help to the destitute.

GEORGE-STREET MISSION, LAMBETH, appeals on behalf of the suffering poor, many of whom are unemployed. The mission seeks to aid by means of free meals, secondhand clothing, and similar assistance as needed.—George Goodman, 29, Princes-square, Kennington Park-road, S.E.

BOARD SCHOOL CHILDREN'S FREE DINNER FUND.—Mrs. Pennington, 5, Alexandra-road, South Hampstead, N.W., pleads for help on behalf of the work of this Society, which, during the past year, has given 156,409 free dinners to the children of widows or of parents out of work, or ill, or otherwise unable to provide sufficient food for the little ones.

THE LIFE OF MRS. BOOTH will not be ready for publication before the third week in December.

THE BIBLE IN THE GERMAN ARMY.—Kaiser Wilhelm takes a great interest in a German society occupied with the distribution of Bibles to soldiers in the army. The management is now in the hands of a retired colonel, who has calculated that since 1831, when the plan was inaugurated, 1,030,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures have been sold at reduced prices to privates. This would amount to an average of about 17,170 per annum.

DONATIONS
RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1892.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

THE LONDON FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

Founded at Pentonville A.D. 1807, for the RESCUE, RECLAMATION, and PROTECTION of BETRAYED and FALLEN WOMEN, from all parts of the United Kingdom, with IMMEDIATE and FREE ADMISSION to APPLICANTS. Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President: The Lord KINNAIRD. Chairman: D. MARSHALL LANG, Esq.

TEN THOUSAND Friendless and Fallen Young Women have been welcomed to these HOMES, shielded from evil, instructed in the way of righteousness, and freely supplied with food, clothing, education, and residence for eighteen months. Persons interested in Rescue Work are invited to send cases.

SIX THOUSAND have been placed in service or restored to friends; very many have given clear evidence of true conversion; and a large number continue to enjoy the loving supervision of the Christian Workers of the TRAINING HOME.

THOUSANDS OF CASES unrecorded have also been temporarily helped and sheltered. The Annual Report contains particulars of the great good accomplished, and will be sent on application.

A DARK OUTLOOK.

The Outlook for the coming Winter is very dark and gloomy, we shall have to face Poverty and Destitution in its most ghastly aspects. To prevent the poor from sinking into utter hopelessness and despair, we Appeal to the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN for Help.

"Can you help me Mr. Young?"

We have sorrowfully answered "No, we cannot, our funds being quite exhausted."

£250 URGENTLY NEEDED.

Donations may be sent to T. and J. YOUNG, 1B, Vowler-street, Deacon-street, Walworth-road; or to our Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

"The Children's Bread."

Dear Friends and Fellow-Workers,

Will you help the cause of Christ's Little Ones by sharing to some extent in my well-nigh crushing burdens?

Nearly 5,000 Orphan and Waif Children to-day in the Homes under my care look to me for food and maintenance. These figures are easily written, but hardly any one outside can realise their weighty import.

Through God's goodness and His people's gifts, all the wants of my children have been hitherto supplied; but now the funds at my disposal are quite exhausted, and I am sorely in need of immediate help.

Meanwhile, my doors still stand open to all the world. Every week from 40 to 60 destitute little strangers take their places among my rescued sons and daughters, and the growing volume of their needs can only be met by a corresponding enlargement of sympathy and self-sacrifice on the part of the Lord's servants.

I am now compelled afresh to lay these heavy burdens at the feet of our Master, Christ, and of His servants everywhere; and though my children's necessities are pressingly urgent, I cannot doubt but that the response to their cry through me will be alike prompt and generous.

Our winter's work is growingly imperious in its demands. I cannot, I dare not, close my doors to the timorous knock of a single destitute child; and even beyond the call of the children there arises a wider plaint from thousands of East-End dwellings where the hearth is fireless and the cupboard is bare. Devoted Christian ladies living in our Deaconess House and labouring among the poorest will gladly carry your gifts of love to those whose lives are so cheerless and so wretched.

Who amidst the fogs of Winter will send through me the sunshine of Christian beneficence into the hearts and lives of homeless Little Children and of the thousands beyond these who are needy and suffering?

Who will respond quickly? £30 will give 1,000 of my children food for a single day, or £150 will do the same for all my family; while £3 will spread the table three times for 100 of my Little Waifs. Any gift, however small, will be gratefully acknowledged by our Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, or by the undersigned.

Ever your faithful fellow-worker in Christ's service
among His Little Ones,

THOS. J. BARNARDO.

PARIS CITY MISSION

Has for 12 years published Salvation in the capital of France—chiefly to its ouvriers. From house to house, in Mission Halls and in cemeteries, by Bible and Gospel tract distribution, in and out of season, its TEN Missionaries have worked on with proof of blessing. Fourteen of its supporters have recently been called HOME. The work is therefore languishing for want of funds. Who will take their place by casting into this part of our Lord's treasury?

Who will gladly supply printed information.

We offer you a carefully-written book telling how to feed babies and young children. It is full of useful information for mothers, fathers, and all interested in the proper care of infants. This little book of instruction shows how to prepare Baby's food, and how to make cow's milk similar in every respect to mother's milk, for babies brought up by hand. Attention to the simple rules given will bring nourishment and health to your child, causing it to grow up happy strong and active. Write naming The Christian and our book will be sent gratis and post free by Burroughs Brothers, 66, Basinghall-st., London, E.C.

THE FORTY-FIRST SERIES OF CASES.

CASES FOR THIS WEEK.

LETTER FROM REV. J. HENDERSON, OF CHRIST-CHURCH, DUDLEY—JUNE 11th, 1892.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I enclose order for three bottles of medicine for charitable distribution. I used it when I was Minister at Walworth, also at Littlehampton, where I have seen wonderful cures result from its use. I have sent one friend from here, Mr. ———, who has been greatly benefited, and who is now able to follow his business again with comfort. I prize your remedy for Consumption so much, that I would not be without it. God bless you in your healing, as in your heavenly work."

LETTER FROM AN OLD PATIENT.

(I like to give such occasionally, as an evidence of "Permanence of Cure.")

MRS. MARTHA SKYRME, PEMBROKE DOCK, now of Croft House, Apley-terrace, commenced my medicine in Jan., 1881. She had been ailing for years, and latterly had been much worse. Both lungs were diseased. She so far improved as to come up to Coombe Lodge from Pembroke Dock, in August of the same year, when it was evident on stethoscopic examination that the condition of her lungs had been much worse at some recent period. She persevered for over twelve months, also taking occasionally a tonic prescribed for her at Coombe Lodge, and got thoroughly well.

Writing me in July of this year, she reminds me of her case, and her two personal consultations, and adds, "I have completed my 50th birthday, and am proud to say I feel stronger to-day than I did at 20 years of age."

NEW AND ORIGINAL LIFE OF MR. SPURGEON.

The Prince of Preachers:

A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, AND A TRIBUTE.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

The Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this Book:—

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

SOME OF THE LATEST PRESS NOTICES.

"Mr. Douglas has a very intelligent grasp of his subject, and handles it in a most appreciative manner."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Young preachers and teachers should read and ponder well these pages. . . . We have great pleasure in commending this good and useful book by Mr. Douglas."—The Methodist S.S. Record.

"The best book about Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. . . . Without any breach of confidence Mr. Douglas has supplied some new material, and what was familiar he has set forth in a way that ensures confidence and brings real profit to the reader.—Divine Life.

CONTENTS:—

ABRAHAM; or, The Obedience of Faith.
ISRAEL: A Prince with God.
JOSEPH: Beloved—Hated—Exalted.
MOSES: The Servant of God.
ELIJAH: And the Secret of his Power.

REVIEW:—

"The studies in the lives and times of Biblical characters which the Rev. F. B. MEYER has from time to time issued during the last few years have been marked by great care in preparation, and a suggestiveness that has made them very acceptable to preachers and teachers."

—The Quiver.

Each Volume contains Nine Original Engravings, and is neatly bound in Cloth Boards with Gilt Lettering.

 Any Volume of this Biographical Series may be had separately, in Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

OTHER WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

EXPOSITORY SERIES.

The Life and Light of Men. Expositions of John I.—XII. 5th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The Presbyterian, August 26th, 1892:—

"These 'Expositions' are not critical; they are practical. They do not deal with the 'text,' nor with 'readings,' nor with any of the difficult theological problems of the Fourth Gospel; but they are evidently designed to be suggestive, to be helpful, to ordinary everyday readers of the New Testament, and it is certain that in many instances this end will be attained."

After a candid critical survey of the whole volume, the reviewer sums up: "But while we have said all this, we are free to confess that on the whole we like the book. A good healthful spirit pervades its entire teaching; and there is such a manifest sympathy with the life, and work, and words of Jesus that we cannot but heartily wish it success."

Tried by Fire. Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter. 10th Thousand. Cloth, 2s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Review from The British Weekly:—

"The popularity of Mr. Meyer's Expositions is a good sign of the times. This, on the First Epistle of Peter, is one of the best, and is full of tender Christian wisdom. There are many unobtrusive signs of thought and culture throughout; but the chief charm of the book is its earnest simplicity."

DEVOTIONAL SERIES.

The Shepherd Psalm. Meditations on the 23rd Psalm. 30th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Irish Congregational Magazine:—

"We have never read anything so charming on the twenty-third Psalm as this volume from the pen of Mr. Meyer. The devout reader will find it one of the most comforting, cheering, and inspiring books he can read."

Christian Living. Practical Counsels concerning the Christian Life. 27th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from Footsteps of Truth:—

"A choice book of nine chapters, into which is condensed a mass of helpful instructions and wise practical counsel on various topics relating to the Christian life."

The Present Tenses of the Blessed LIFE. 28th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

A Review from The Record:—

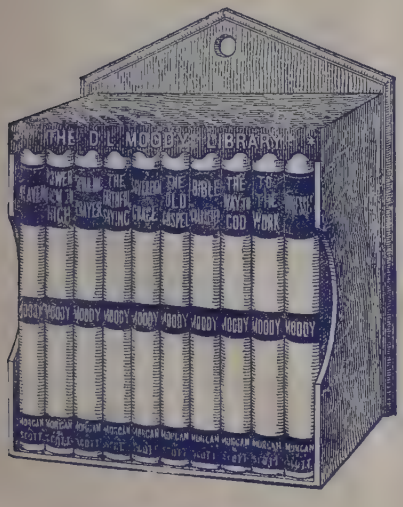
"An excellent little book, full of practical Christianity; a pocket companion which will be valued by those whose dearest aim it is to walk daily more closely with God."

The Future Tenses of the Blessed LIFE. Uniform with the Devotional Series. Cloth boards, 1s.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

Extract from Preface:—

"If by the constitution of our minds we must anticipate the future, then let us believe that it is radiant with His presence, filling each moment to its outermost rim. No day, whatever it takes, can deprive us of Him. Each day will utter to the next some speech of His love. All the days linked together and entwined with His present grace will make a golden chain of holy and blessed living."

The Psalms Notes and Readings. Pocket Edition. 8th Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.



This volume is also published in demy 8vo size, as one of "THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE READINGS" Series of Expositions. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt, 2s. 6d.

A Review from The Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine:—

"A pocket commentary on the entire book of Hebrew song. The treatment of each Psalm is brief, plain, and well planned. The divisions are usefully suggestive for public addresses, and the fillings in are the pith and marrow of Gospel truth. For private devotional use also it is a little treasure."

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C., and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Close of Another Year.

AN ANXIOUS TIME.

To the Readers of "The Christian."

The year 1892 appears to have flitted very rapidly, but so it is, and the period with its issues are now almost altogether in review.

From our records it appears that 898 YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS have sought shelter at the well-known 200, Euston Road. Of these 368 were PREVENTIVE CASES—mostly girls in their teens. 398 were RESCUE CASES; 54 MATERNITY CASES, and some of these of a most painful character. 78 were PRISON and POLICE-COURT CASES. (Happily mercy is now often blended with the exercise of justice.) 130 YOUNG SERVANTS have availed themselves of the new SERVANTS' HOME. 615 poor outcasts have sought and found shelter at the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE. So far as possible the permanent welfare of all these has been carefully sought, and above all things their spiritual and eternal interests.

The reader of these lines will not be surprised when informed that the Collection made at the commencement of this year has been MORE THAN EXHAUSTED; but so it is, and in no single instance has the condition of the exchequer influenced against the rendering of prompt help.

Now, if ONE THOUSAND READERS of "The Christian" will send promptly, as may be convenient, I believe that 1892 will close as all former years have, and that our note will be "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Donations may be sent, as heretofore, to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., or

Yours faithfully,

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Secretary.

Office, 200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

December 10th.—Grateful thanks for some kind responses. I am anticipating some further tokens of practical sympathy.

NEW AND ORIGINAL LIFE OF MR. SPURGEON.

The Prince of Preachers:

A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, AND A TRIBUTE.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

The Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this Book:—

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

SOME OF THE LATEST PRESS NOTICES.

"Mr. Douglas has a very intelligent grasp of his subject, and handles it in a most appreciative manner."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Young preachers and teachers should read and ponder well these pages. . . . We have great pleasure in commending this good and useful book by Mr. Douglas."—The Methodist S.S. Record.

"The best book about Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. . . . Without any breach of confidence Mr. Douglas has supplied some new material, and what was familiar he has set forth in a way that ensures confidence and brings real profit to the reader."—Divine Life.

Any readers who have not had occasion to consult the shipping intelligence in Monday's papers, will learn with thankfulness that the Etruria, on which Mr. Moody and his son sailed from Queenstown, reached New York on Saturday forenoon, after a rapid passage of six days and two hours.

At the present time, when so many people are out of work, there should be a sympathetic interest in the operations of the Exeter Hall Employment Bureau. Sad cases of want come under the notice of the director of this department, Mr. J. Macdonald, who will be pleased to receive contributions toward the relief fund.

We rejoice that our veteran friend, Mr. E. W. Thomas, has been the means this year of sheltering and aiding in the Friendless and Fallen Institution 898 young women (rescue and preventive), while in addition 615 unhappy outcasts have found shelter at the Open-all-night Refuge. This important work, which God has in past years greatly honoured and blessed, is at present very urgently in need of generous help.

Mr. St. John Mivart's singular article in the current number of The Nineteenth Century appears to have caused some trouble in Romanist circles, for, strange as are some of its statements, it is admitted that they are not contrary to Roman Catholic theology. We are so accustomed to hear of the uniformity of teaching and unchangeableness of dogma in the Romish Church, that it is somewhat startling to find in a Roman Catholic journal two contributions from Romanist divines, in which, dealing with Dr. Mivart's article, there is some conflict of view. One writer insists that the "unchangeable Church" cannot yield to the spirit of the age or "manipulate her doctrines." The other writer says:—

What the attitude of the Church may be in the future as regards those views which are tolerated at present, I cannot say; but whatever the Church decides will meet with the most willing assent on the part of all Catholics.

This latter statement is perhaps as remarkable for its writer's belief in the elasticity of Rome as for his confidence in the readiness of its followers to accept anything which they may be bidden to accept.

The drink question is ever with us, but we hardly expected to see it cropping up in connection with an institution like Epsom College. Educational authorities are usually credited with some knowledge of the dangers and temptations of youth, and with a strong desire to help the young under their care to battle successfully with them. But The Medical Pioneer is compelled to protest against the decision of the Council of that Institution with regard to dietary:—

We cannot but utter a most emphatic protest against the routine issue of beer to the pupils, both at dinner and supper. It is a wrong done to the boys to implant in them a desire for beer, some of them never having tasted it before they go to school. They are led to believe that such drinks are necessary and beneficial, and, as all experience teaches, many of them will not stop at this allowance, even while they are at school, and certainly not afterwards.

In the interests of the young people we would seek to impress upon this governing body to bring their table arrangements in a line with Christian morality, modern habits, and scientific discovery.

The Missionary Herald for this month states that the sum desired for the Thanksgiving Fund of the Baptist Missionary Society has already been more than realised. The total amount given and promised is now over £105,600. We rejoice with Mr. Baynes and his friends, at this gratifying result. The fund will not be closed till the end of March, and there is still opportunity for those churches to contribute that have not already done so. No large measure of blessing at home can be expected while the Lord's parting command remains unfulfilled. The time has not yet come for congratulations. We may be thankful for what has been done, but not satisfied as though we had done all we ought.

A friend deeply interested and wholly engaged in connection with foreign missions urges the need of an undenominational mission for India on the lines of the China Inland Mission. This suggests the question, If a new mission should be formed, are there any particulars in which it could more nearly approach the pattern shown us in the New Testament than do the great older societies, or others of the more modern type of the China Inland and North Africa missions.

Obviously, the Great Commission was given to the Church, and as the Church necessarily consists of churches (Rev. ii. 3) these constitute the body responsible for the evangelisation of the world. But the position of the Societies is that of intermediaries between the churches and the missionaries, and consequently these are not brought into close personal touch with each other. The ideal Missionary Society appears to us to be an organisation which, in any part of the foreign field, should locate missionaries, giving them counsel, information, and all the results of their experience, leaving the churches to support the missionary and to be in direct correspondence with him.

To some considerable extent this is being done already by the older Societies and still more by the younger ones. But with very high appreciation of both, and deep respect for the wisdom, faithfulness, and devotion of those who control them at home as well as of those who represent them abroad, we suggest that it has not been accorded its true place in Missionary methods.

The Rev. G. H. Rouse LL.B., of Calcutta, has written a striking letter to Mr. A. H, Baynes, the highly esteemed secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, in which it is said: "Our Centenary meetings are over; much enthusiasm was manifested at them; the £100,000 fund has been practically raised, and we hope to add to it, but where are the men? Is all the enthusiasm to end in money and talk? One main object of the fund is to supply outfit and two years' maintenance for a hundred extra men; what will be the good of it if we do not get the men?"

Why is there this want of men even more than of money? Does it not originate in the lack of Missionary enthusiasm in the churches? How, then, can the churches be filled with Missionary enthusiasm? More perhaps than by any other means, by being in close personal affectionate correspondence and intercourse with known and loved ones, relatives or friends, who are in the high places of the missionary field.

Anniversary missionary meetings, missionary prayer meetings, missionary magazines, are all good and necessary, but just as "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin," so the living contact, if only maintained by letter with one or more missionaries abroad, creates an interest in the country, its inhabitants, and its needs, which will surely result in many giving their money and in some giving themselves.

We therefore suggest to all churches, Sunday-schools, Y.P.S.C.E.'s, Y.M.C.A.'s, Y.W.C.A.'s, and every other band making collections for missionaries, not to content themselves with sending an indefinite amount collected quarterly to the funds of a Society; but to make themselves responsible for a definite sum adequate to the support of one missionary or more, who should be their own representative on the foreign field. Some churches could easily support several; others could not support one; but two or more of such could combine, and thus secure the personal attachment and obedience of their members to the Great Commission.

PRIESTLY INTOLERANCE IN IRELAND.—The case mentioned lately in our columns of the shutting up of a woman in a lunatic asylum at Omagh, because she would not attend mass and go to confession, has had a satisfactory ending. At a meeting of the governers of the asylum a motion that the woman be discharged was carried. We hope that an action for false incarceration will be brought, so that all the facts may come to light.

The Present Distress.

The columns of the daily papers are full of evidences of the prevalence of poverty and distress. Meetings of the unemployed, a conference of agriculturists to consider the causes of the depression of "the greatest industry," complaints of languishing trade, angry feeling on account of prohibitive or high tariffs in the United States and elsewhere, the shrinkage in the value of investments, and the failure of several companies in which thousands of thrifty people of small means had invested much, or the whole, of their savings, are facts too plain in meaning to be passed by. Common humanity, not to say Christianity, loudly calls for attention and thought at such a crisis.

MANY CAUSES.

To say that the causes of the distress are many is to be trite and true. Life is complicated; no influence acts alone. With the cause of free trade versus protection; with the state of the land laws; with the charges on land; with the incidence of taxation; with the rate of wages and the length of a working day, and other such matters, we do not here and now concern ourselves. We only desire that they may be discussed fairly, in the light of ample knowledge, without class or partisan bitterness. We wish rather to direct attention to one cause, of which we never hear a word in the gatherings either of capitalists or working-men when they meet, whether separately or unitedly, to discuss their troubles. It is a cause also which has an intimate connection with our national character, with our physical stamina, and with everything else which contributes to make us either strong or contemptible. To say that of the million paupers whom we have it makes at least one half of them, as it admittedly does, is at once to fasten upon it a large part of our burden, shame, and misery. We have something palpable to deal with. If it can be proved, as it can, that tens of millions of money are wasted yearly by all classes of the community upon a gratification which they would be better without, which is deadly to the bodies and souls of such a host of our fellow-countrymen, then it is a mistake to take every other cause of our distress into account and leave this giant cause out.

We have no desire to exaggerate the evil by one iota; we follow a cool statistician (Mr. James Whyte), whose paper, read before the Manchester Statistical Society, lies under our eye. He too quotes an "eminent American economist, Mr. F. A. Walker," to the following effect:—"We need a new Adam Smith, or another Hume, to write the economics of consumption in which would be found the dynamics of wealth; to trace in their effects upon production the forces which are set in motion by the uses made of wealth; to show how certain forms of consumption clear the mind, strengthen the hand, and elevate the aims of the individual economic agent, while promoting the social order and mutual confidence which are favourable conditions for the complete and harmonious action of the industrial system; how other forms of consumption debauch and debase man as an economic agent, and introduce disorder and waste into the complicated mechanism of the productive agencies. Here is an opportunity for some great moral philosopher, strictly confining himself to the economical effects of these causes, denying himself all regard to purely ethical, political, or theological considerations, to write what shall be the most important chapter of political economy, now, alas! almost a blank." Mr. Whyte has set himself the task of writing part of that chapter in

"THE COST OF OUR DRINKING CUSTOMS."

Taking the government returns we find the direct cost of the liquor itself to the nation to be a hundred millions sterling for the year; that is, after allowing forty millions for customs and excise. Then follows a careful examination into the indirect economic effects of the drink traffic, and a very startling result is reached. The loss of productive labour, owing to the unfitness of workers who drink for the work they have to do, the loss of time, the inefficiency, the waste, the delay, is an enormous item. The destruction of infant life, the possible wealth of a nation, is another large figure. The facts that 85 per cent. of the children who are received into Dr. Barnardo's homes come there through our drinking customs, and that Dr. Guthrie computed that 99 per cent. of the children in his ragged school were the offspring of parents whose poverty was due to their drinking habits, show how terribly drink is sapping the manhood of the nation. The depressed health of the people, the attacks of active disease, and the rate of mortality are among our heavy losses. And it is not the operative classes only whose economic value is impaired by intemperance, indeed, almost all other sorts and conditions of men are, on the average, greatly deteriorated as wealth-producers of this cause. Then there is the cost of our paupers, of our police, of our 50,000 known thieves and depredators at large, of the sad army of prostitutes, of our loafers of all ranks of society. The whole cost to the nation of indirect loss is one hundred and eighty millions a year. Thirty millions more go to support those who ought to have supported themselves; and a hundred millions are paid for the article which produces all this poverty—total, £310,000,000 sterling per annum. We can only say that a nation which so recklessly squanders its means ought to have poverty and misery in its streets. Drink alone costs us "more than all our foreign and colonial trade, all our foreign and colonial loans and investments bring us." We would fight the world for any trumpery market of a few millions, and yet we are practising customs which are making home markets languish and fail. Were even a third only of the drink money spent on food, clothing, dwellings, and such-like things, we should see such a revival of trade as would astonish us. We should find that obedience to God is the soundest political economy. Until then we shall have to feel the rod. There will be no relief, or at least no permanent relief, until we learn righteousness. "I will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord." The times call upon all Christians to bestir themselves as they never yet have done to save their country from "the only enemy she has to fear."

DEATH OF LADY RADSTOCK.

Many will hear with sorrow of the departure of Lady Radstock, which took place on Thursday last at Mayfield, Southampton.

The following lines, which we have received from Lord Radstock, will be read with deep interest by the many friends who cherish the memory of one who is so widely remembered with sympathy and affection:—

"We asked life, and Thou gavest long life, even for ever and ever. 'Thou hast made us most blessed for ever—exceeding glad with the joy of thy countenance.' We praise Him for his grace seen in her lovely, self-effaced, trusting life; for the grace seen in bright acquiescence of months of suffering and weakness, and which made her, even in moments of greatest exhaustion, have a loving care for others. We thank Him for (to her) a painless departure, and for the realisation of her present unclouded joy. We thank Him for being very near us in the furnace. We thank Him for his loving sympathy, expressed through so many of his members. We pray for fresh grace to walk worthy of Him who has called us to his kingdom and glory, and that the precious corn of wheat which has fallen unto the ground and died may bear abundant fruit in us to his praise."

Restored.

Nothing that occurred that evening was in accord with the plan laid out. The speaker who was expected failed to come, and one of the workers who had hoped to listen was hurriedly called to fill his place after the service began. Two of the ladies, when they found there were no others going, hastened to arrange their work so that they might go. The leader of the singing, with a daring which only those of his profession know how to assume, suddenly called on two of the workers for a duet, and from the words of this song the speaker of the evening gained his suggestion for a text—"Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

As the song service proceeded, a man, wandering aimlessly along the street, chanced to pass the mission, and heard the singing. A thought of his Christian mother crossed his poor bemuddled mind, and he came back again, and, entering the room, walked up to the front seat and sat down. The two workers on the platform saw him, soon noticed his restlessness and evident distress, and both of them prayed throughout the service that the Holy Spirit, so plainly striving with that soul, might indeed lead him to the One who alone could give rest to his heavy laden heart. Twice during the service he got his hat and made a start to go, but the coloured friend beside him laid a detaining hand on his shoulder and whispered words of help.

The touching story of John G. Wooley's conversion was told to illustrate God's power to save men, the lowest in sin. The man in the front seat listened intently, but his face grew constantly more troubled and wretched. After the talk a song was sung of the rest to be found in the Saviour's love, and then followed a testimony meeting. Those who spoke brought out the thoughts of the text, testifying of the peace and rest they had found since they accepted the invitation to "Come." Finally he rose, shaking all over, and then told us that he was a drunkard, that he had not been sober for six weeks, and even then was under the influence of liquor. He had gambled away all his money, had been away from his wife and two little girls for four months, and was a wreck through his dissipated life. "I've sat here to-night listening to your talk about the rest a man could find if he would forsake his sin, and I've heard that woman sing about the rest she has found, that shows in her face when she sings, and I know John G. Wooley well—have known him for years, and know the change there is in him. There's something got hold of me to-night—I don't know what; but if it isn't too late, and if there is any hope that a poor drunkard like me can find what you people have I want you to help me."

He did indeed find rest for his sin-sick soul before he left the mission that night; although he was fearful that it could not be true, and longed to be perfectly sober that he might be sure he did not deceive himself. For two weeks he has been faithful in attendance, always carrying his little Testament, always testifying of God's saving power; and once he brought a companion to hear the story of Christ's forgiving love. He had a great longing to get back to his wife and children as soon as he could get the money, but tormented himself with fears that she had become so discouraged because of his repeated falls after trying to reform that she would not try him again. He was urged to go as soon as possible that he might prove to her, not that he had reformed again, but that he was "a new creature in Christ Jesus." A letter was written to the wife, to which she replied, stating that she had no confidence in him, but he had best come home. On Wednesday night he started, and before this time, we have confidence to believe, he has proved to them all that the Gospel of Christ is indeed "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."—The (Chicago) Institute Tie.

National Righteousness.

Sir,—I have been reading lately with something like feelings of indignation the July number of National Righteousness, which, as you know, is devoted to the opium question. It contains few facts that I did not know before, but seeing them all brought together as they are in that magazine awakened in my mind a deeper feeling of horror at the iniquity of the opium trade than is ordinarily present with me. I keep on asking myself: How can men who hold the position held by some of the leading opponents of the anti-opium agitation speak as they do speak about opium and the effects of opium smoking?

If these men were merely bankers, traders, editors of local newspapers, and petty officials who had lived abroad, one would not be surprised at their utterances, for we out here know only too well how possible it is for ordinary Europeans living in European settlements in the East to know absolutely nothing about the social life of the natives of the land in which they reside, while at the same time they sometimes speak with the greatest confidence on this subject. But, with medical men who have spent many years in India and China, and with high officials who have had special opportunities of acquainting themselves with the facts relating to opium, the case is altogether different.

Dr. Griffith John has said, speaking of missionaries, "We know that opium is a curse—a curse physically, a curse morally, and a curse socially—to the Chinese, and this fact we must declare in loud ringing tones." There is not a missionary in China of five years' standing who would not re-echo that sentence, and the more one has mixed with the people at large, and has got at the inner life of the nation, the more emphatically would he speak on the subject. How is it, then, that some who are in a position to speak with authority, and who claim to know as much of the subject as missionaries, lose no opportunity of declaring "in loud ringing tones" the exact opposite of what missionaries say?

In answering this question to myself I am reminded of a conversation which I had many years ago with one of the most influential opponents of the Anti-Opium Society. I forbear to give his name, but there is none whose name is better known. He was defending the action of the Indian Government, and condemning the programme of the Anti-Opium Society. He ridiculed the action of China in asking for the abolition of the opium trade with India, and spoke in words to this effect: "As well might England say to France, 'Our people must not have French brandy. We do not mind their having Scotch whisky, but the trade in French brandy is a most iniquitous one.'" I replied: "That is not the point. My position is this—granted the complicity of the Chinese Government in allowing opium smoking, our duty remains unaltered. If I see a man is already the worse for Scotch whisky I certainly ought not to ply him either with French brandy or alcohol in any other form. Supposing someone is making his own brother or his own son drunk, so much the worse for him; but this does not justify me, as one outside of the family, in doing the same thing for my own advantage. I do not defend the Chinese Government, and I believe that it will not now stop the cultivation of opium in China, but that does not make it right for England to be a partner in this wretched business."

He shrugged his shoulders and said, "Oh! I grant you that if we were all perfectly good we should have nothing to do with it." "Just so," I replied. This gentleman, who speaks as an authority on at least some aspects of the opium trade, had conceded the whole question; but, alas! his public utterances since that time have shown me that to be "perfectly good" is not his ideal for the Indian Government. This, however, is the ideal of those who believe in righteousness as being the first essential of a nation's prosperity.

The difference between the opponents of the Indian opium trade and the upholders of it may be put in a nutshell. "Cost what it may in money, England must act righteously." This is our contention. "Cost what it may in morals, India must have revenue." That is theirs. We do not deny the necessity for revenue for India, but we believe God, and have every confidence that when we take the step that righteousness demands, He will then show us the true solution of the pecuniary difficulty. If, however, we will only be righteous when it has been proved to demonstration that we shall lose nothing by being so, God will surely leave us to persevere in our unrighteousness, and to reap the fruits of it.—I am, Sir, etc., Arnold Foster.

LITERATURE FOR INDIA.

During his visit to India, Dr. Pentecost was much impressed with the necessity for Christian literature, and since his return he has lost no opportunity of calling attention to the subject. Last week he devoted three days to addressing meetings in Liverpool, Manchester, and Brighton, with Rev. James Johnston, the secretary of the Christian Literature Society for India.

At Liverpool the Doctor showed the wonderful progress made by Protestant missions in a single century. Comparing the results of missionary effort in the first and the nineteenth centuries, he showed that in India alone the number of converts from heathenism had been far greater than those of the primitive Church. The importance of Christian literature, not only for the growth and strength of these converts, but for the aggressive work among their countrymen, was strongly urged.

The meeting in Manchester was presided over by the Mayor. The audience was chiefly composed of influential merchants and clergymen of the different churches. Amongst other subjects, most of them connected with what he had seen of mission work, Dr. Pentecost showed with great force the importance of morality and Christianity for the future of India in every department of a nation's prosperity.

As a result of earnest missionary enterprise, there is being created a capacity for intelligence, and for information, and for learning, that must be fed; if that capacity and appetite are not met by literature which will secure to those who have heard the gospel, the full import, an evil and destructive literature will spring up, that the Christian Literature Society is doing much with its books, and the people of England would strengthen the hands of every missionary in India, by enabling this society to circulate more freely, a clean, pure, Christian literature through the length and breadth of India.

The meeting in Brighton in the Pavilion, over which the Mayor presided, was the best of the series. "In making a powerful appeal on behalf of the society, Dr. Pentecost said their efforts would macadamise the road which had been laid out by education, and keep the feet of the Hindoos from sinking in the mire of sensuous reading, or falling over the stumbling blocks put in their way by infidel books; while they would break up new ground for future missionaries to go in and possess the land."

AN ANTI-OPIUM MEETING was lately held at the Peckham Rye Tabernacle. Rev. J. S. Adams (seventeen years a missionary in Burmah and Inland China) and Mr. W. Raju Naidu spoke. The former explained the process of the manufacture of opium, and the result of its use on its victims. The latter pleaded in thrilling tones with those present to do away with the traffic which was ruining his native land.

Old Testament Saints.*

BY DR. J. ELDER CUMMING.

These all died in faith . . . . and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.—Hebrews xi. 13.

Let us recall these illustrious names, that we may think of them together. The godly Enoch, to whom this rarest testimony is given that by faith for three hundred years he "pleased God"; the great founder of the Jewish race, Abraham, father of all them that believe; Isaac, most faultless of the patriarchs, most submissive, and most unworldly; Joseph, in whom the Spirit of God was pure amid impurity, a blessing and a joy wherever he went; Moses, wisest, and perhaps greatest, of the Jewish race; David, the man after God's own heart; and Jonathan, whose love, beyond a woman's, surpassed and exceeded the tenderness of David. And what shall I more say? For the time indeed would fail to write of Elijah, the prophet of fire and of faith; and of Elisha, with a double portion of his master's spirit; and of Isaiah, the fire-touched messenger of the Most High; and of Jeremiah, the prophet of tears; and of Daniel, the man greatly beloved, with garments unspotted in a heathen court, in whom enemies could find no other fault than that he was a man of prayer. Take these men together, not as single stars, but as a galaxy; and let us seriously ask whether in Christian grace of almost any sort, men of later days can be found to outshine and to surpass them? In what sort of virtue or beauty of character can we find better men even in the history of the Church of Christ? Is it in courage? Let the names of Moses, Joshua, Gideon, and Daniel answer the question. Is it in renouncing the world, martyr-like, at God's word? Let Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and the three Jews in Babylon reply. Is it in patience? Job's early years and crushing affliction suggest an answer. Is it in purest and most unselfish chivalry? Can we find anything to surpass the Bayard of Scripture story, Jonathan, the Prince of Israel?

And if, going behind outward action, we seek to test the state of soul among such men, and to discover whether our admiration must be bounded by the external life, what do we say, for instance, to the Book of Psalms? We may not forget that these sacred songs are not merely the inspiration of the Spirit of God, but are also the transcript of the personal experience of their authors, some of them, as David, well known to us; others, as Asaph, mere names; while of most we have no names at all. These, let us remember, are men whose hearts are laid bare to us as they were seen by God; we hear the confessions, aspirations, and desires, which they uttered in their secret closet, little thinking, for the most part, that any but God would ever hear them; we see the secret details of what they did, and felt, and thought; their hearts have been laid open to us, I venture to say, as neither heart of brother, wife, nor child has ever been. And of these men what shall we say? Shall we say that they knew but little of spiritual truth and emotion? . . . I seriously challenge denial of the assertion that, taken as a whole, the Book of Psalms marks the high-water level of spiritual feeling and holy thought among men, not including, of course, the utterances of our blessed Lord.

This seems to me to be the true gauge of the spiritual teaching of the old Testament Scriptures, and near this high level it runs from Enoch down to Malachi, to the wonder and the confusion of the Church of the present day. . . On what did these holy men feed their souls? What was the secret of their purity and strength? . . The secret of their life was faith. They trusted a God whom they knew, whose law was before them, whose word was guiding them, whose strength was keeping them, whose love was dwelling in them. They reached that knowledge of God, and attained to that faith in Him through the Old Testament Scriptures, in so far as they existed in their day. If men cannot find such teaching there now, it is their loss. But by this holy book the saints of old came to know God, our God, Christ's God, the Father. And it was in this knowledge, service, and fellowship, and by these alone, that they lived.

Joshua and the Land of Canaan.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE WARRIOR CHRIST.—Joshua v. 13.

"It came to pass." The time and exact locality are not defined, but they are not of much account in the presence of that marvellous episode which stands before the conquest of Canaan, as an illuminated capital before the black letterpress of some old missal. As to the first, it was probably the day in which the manna had ceased, and the Leader had realised that the land must now furnish the commissariat. As to the second, it is enough to know that it was by Jericho.

Behind lay the Jordan, the seam made by the passage of the host no longer discernible, though the fresh heap of memorial stones proclaimed the miracle of the dried river bed. Beneath, under the shadow of the hill, lay the camp, where the people were resting from their long fatigues, in the first glad realisation that their long journeyings were ended. Whilst five miles distant, on the path to Canaan, towering above the palm groves, arose the strongly fortified walls of Jericho. "Now Jericho had shut the gates, and was shut in" (R.V. marg.).

It must have been for Joshua, at least, a time of anxious suspense. He could not forget how forty years before the former generation had cried out for bondage in Egypt, or graves in the desert, rather than face the terrors of fortified cities and giant champions. And what might not their children do! It had been comparatively easy to cope with Amalek, and Og, and Sihon, because they had met Israel in open war upon the field of battle, but that was a very different matter to attacking a city which was able to hold its own in a long siege. It was impossible to leave it in the rear, unsubdued, but it was also suicidal to sit down before it to starve it to surrender. As the weary months dragged on, the energy of the people would evaporate and the armies of their foes would gather. Eagerly must the lonely chieftain have longed for one moment with Moses, or better still, with that Angel of the Presence of God, who had been promised when the camp was still pitched beneath the cliffs of Sinai.

Thinking much and deeply, Joshua wandered forth alone, and suddenly, "as he lifted up his eyes and looked, behold there stood a man over against him with his sword drawn in his hand." We need those uplifted eyes. Too often we keep our gaze fixed on the ground, and miss the celestial visions that await us all round; as boys, intent upon a game of marbles, are oblivious to the sunset-glow which trembles in the western sky, where bars of gold and crimson lie in an ocean of the palest green.

But who was this man? Was he phantom or reality, Hebrew or Canaanite, friend or foe? Joshua knew not, but his heart was pure and clear, and therefore he did not hesitate to go up to him and challenge him with the inquiry, "Art thou for us or for our adversaries?" Then came the majestic reply, "Nay, but as Captain of the host of the Lord am I now come." And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and took the place of lowly obedience, saying "What saith my lord to his servant?"

We cannot doubt, then, who He was. Though bearing the semblance of a man, he was certainly neither man nor angel. Had he been either He would have instantly repelled the homage which Joshua gave. When the men of Lystra were about to sacrifice to Paul and Barnabas, they cried out in horror, "Sirs, why do ye these things, we are men of like passions with you"; and when John, amid the blaze of glory, fell down before the feet of the angel who lifted the concealing veil, he said, "See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant and of thy brethren the prophets." But when Joshua prostrated himself before this mysterious apparition, there was no prohibition to his lowly homage. It was accepted as Peter's in the fishing-boat, and as the leper's when he knelt at the blessed feet of Christ for healing. Joshua was even urged to more careful and reverent homage, in words which were addressed to Moses from the burning bush, where the I AM spake with him; and we have to believe that He who spake to Joshua on the threshold of Canaan was none other than Jehovah, the God of Israel, whose delights, long before the incarnation, were with the sons of men, and who anticipated it by paying preliminary visits to our earth in corporeal form.

The title here adopted by our Lord clings to Him throughout the Bible. Isaiah says that He is given to be the Leader and Commander of his people. Peter describes him as the Prince or Captain of Life. The Epistle to the Hebrews refers to Him as the Captain of our Salvation, who was made perfect through suffering. And at the close of the book, we see a majestic procession come forth from the opened heaven, led by a Captain, who is clothed in vesture dipped in blood, and whose name is the Word of God.

I. The Special Significance of this Vision to Joshua.—It has been generally supposed that this Divine Captain came to take Joshua's place in command, and assume the supreme direction of the hosts of Israel, much as when the German Emperor takes the field, his greatest officers subordinate themselves to him, surrendering to his hands the control of the campaign, and content to execute his plans. But that is not the deepest meaning here. "The Lord's host" does not primarily allude to those Israelite armies encamped beside the overflowing waters of the Jordan, but to other and invisible hosts, encamped all around on those heights, though no ear ever heard the call of the sentries at their posts of duty, or saw the sheen of their swords flashing in the sunlight, or beheld their marshalled ranks. Those troops of harnessed angels were the hosts of which this wondrous warrior was captain.

There are several references in Scripture to the presence, near at hand, of angel hosts. When Jacob, after his angry altercation with Laban, was on his way back to Canaan, fearful perhaps of pursuit, we are told that the angels of God met him, as though a squadron of heavenly armies suddenly came in sight, assuring him of defence against attack. When the servant of the prophet was dismayed to find himself encircled by the hosts of Syria, he was permitted, in answer to Elisha's prayer, to see that the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire. The Psalmist tells of the angel that encampeth round about them that fear Him, and of the hosts that do his bidding. So in Gethsemane, the Lord referred to the twelve legions of angels who were waiting, under arms, for the least indication of the Father's will to come only too gladly to his relief. It is therefore in harmony with the tenour of Scripture to see those lines of warriors waiting within the curtains of the unseen to be led against the foes of God and Israel. And we read a new meaning into the ancient phrase, by which Jehovah became known. "Who is the King of Glory?" "The Lord of hosts, He is the King of glory."

But if it be true, that there are hosts of light, it is certainly also true that there are hosts of darkness. Such is the perpetual affirmation of Scripture. Behind the gods of the heathen, inspiration detects demons, who rule men through the hideous idols of their hands. Behind the might of vast but ungodly, empires, inspired men descry the presence and activity of great potentates from Satan's fallen realm. Behind the darkness of this world the Bible teaches us to look for wicked spirits, who rule it from "the heavenlies." These they occupy for the present, and until the Second Advent hurls them down, first to the earth, and afterwards to the abyss (1 Cor. x. 20; Dan. x. 13; Rev. xii. 2; Eph. vi. 12).

And, therefore, the story of the conquest of Canaan is not simply the account of battles fought between Israel and the Canaanites, but of the results of a conflict yet more mysterious and far-reaching between the bright squadrons that follow the lead of the Captain of the Lord's host, and the dark battalions of evil entrenched in the hearts and strongholds of the enemies of God. Is it, therefore, any cause for wonder that the walls of Jericho fell down; or that vast armies were scattered, without a blow being struck; or that the land was subdued in a seven years' campaign? These achievements were the earthly and visible results of victories won in the heavenly and spiritual sphere by armies which follow the Word of God upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and pure. Those walls fell down because smitten by the impact of celestial hosts. Those armies fled because the dark powers with which they were in league had been put to the rout before the Lord God of Sabaoth. That land was subdued because of some great dislodgment which had taken place in regions beyond human ken. There was, therefore, great significance in the words with which Caleb sought to encourage his people, "Their defence is removed from over them, and the Lord is with us: fear them not." And we can better understand what the Lord meant when He said, "As Captain of the Lord's host am I now come."

II. The Significance of this Vision to the Church.—If we read the thoughts already suggested into the story of the conquest of Canaan, we shall find it invested with fresh interest. It is not only an ancient historic record, but it is a page torn out of the chronicles of heaven, telling of that mighty conflict which has been in process since the introduction of moral evil, and shall last till the Son of God has destroyed the works of the devil.

Throughout the world of nature there are signs of conflict and collision. Everywhere armies meet in battle-shock, and part to repair their losses or count their gains. According to the last findings of science, the invisible molecules of the calmest air are in rapid motion all around us, jostling with each other, and fighting hard to keep their course, but hindered by a thousand kindred molecules that are fighting too, so that we move and work in a very cyclone of whirling atoms. There is no pool, however tranquil; no forest-glade, however peaceful; no isle bathed by southern seas, and set gem-like on the breast of ocean, however enchanting; no scene, however fascinating: which is not swept by opposing squadrons contending for victory. The swift pursue their prey, the strong devour the weak, the fittest alone survive in the terrific strife.

So it has been in the history of our race. The books that contain the records of the past are largely records of wars and decisive battles. Their pages are wet with tears and blood. Great kings have been great conquerors; their path marked, like that of Gengis Khan, by pyramids of human skulls. The foundations of vast empires have been laid, like those of African palaces, on the writhing bodies of dying men.

For the student of God's ways all this leads up to a more tremendous struggle, between darkness and light, evil and good, Satan and our King. And here is the real importance of the Ascension, which was the worthy climax of the wonders of the first advent, as it will introduce the glories of the second.

All through his earthly ministry our Lord encountered the dark powers. They assailed Him in the wilderness of temptation, opposed Him through the wretched victims they possessed, gathered in their might in the glades of Gethsemane, hissed their horrid suggestions into his heart on the cross, and resisted his every step as He arose. Up to that moment none of woman born had proved himself able to overcome their attacks. Adam, in his innocence, Moses the friend of God, David the beloved, had alike fallen beneath their fiery darts, till it seemed that human nature could never become their match. But the life and death of the man Christ Jesus turned the tide. And when He arose and ascended far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named not only in this world but also in that which is to come, it became established beyond a doubt that, though man in himself was no match for hell, yet man in Christ, in union with the Son of God, was more than a conqueror, able to do all things through Him that strengthened Him, and destined to overcome. Indeed, little children overcame, because greater was He that was in the church than he that was in the world.

Alas! this truth has been too little appreciated. The Church of Christ has either considered that she contained within herself all the resources necessary for victory over the evil of the world; or she has stood paralysed or aghast before the Jerichos of sin, which have risen up to obstruct her path. The fenced cities of drink and lust, of self-indulgence or apathy, have refused to open their gates to her challenge, and have laughed defiance to her hosts. Then she has appealed to Cæsar, to human methods, and alliances, and expedients. But, notwithstanding all, the walls have not fallen down, nor her foes given back.

But when the Church has won her mightiest victories, over the idols of Greece and Rome, the systems of pagan philosophy, the temples of Venus, and Diana, and Jove; those successes have been always due, not to the valour or prowess of the Church, but to the spiritual forces with which she has been allied. To this same cause we must trace the missionary triumphs of recent years, the open doors, the tottering of heathen systems, the unopposed rogress of the Gospel in many lands. These re-ults have been simultaneous with changes in the phere of the Unseen and Eternal, of which we can orm no true conception; and the future conquests f the Church must depend, not on her wealth, or umbers, or prestige, but on her loving and hallowed liance with those celestial hosts to which the Lord esus referred on the plains of Jericho, when He aid, "As Captain of the Lord's host am I now me."

III. THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THIS VISION TO OUR-LVES.—We sometimes feel lonely and discouraged.

perate are resting quietly in their tents. No one ur Jerichos are so formidable—the neglected parish, e empty church, the hardened congregation, the odless household. How can we ever capture these, nd hand them over to the Lord, like dismantled astles, for Him to occupy?

That problem at first baffles us, and appears soluble. Then we vow it shall be untied, and ummon all our wit and energy to solve it. We udy the methods of others and copy them; deliver ur best addresses and sermons, put forth herculean xertions. We adopt exciting advertisements and uestionable methods, borrowed from the world.
uppose Israel had taken lessons in scaling walls nd taking fenced cities from the Canaanites! Or at the people had made an attack on Jericho with ight and main, determined to find or make a breach!
uch suppositions are not altogether absurd. At ast they have their counterpart in the practice of o many of God's children, who forget that the race not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, and at by strength shall no man prevail.

Finally, in our hours of disappointment, when we ave tried our best in vain, and have fallen, as the a-birds who dash themselves against the lighthouse wer fall to the foot with broken wing, it is well to go rth alone, confessing our helplessness, and tarry-g for the vision, for we shall then be likeliest to e the Captain of the Lord's host. He will under-ke our cause, He will marshal his troops and win e day, He will fling the walls of Jericho to the ound. Those walls can only fall down by faith, r faith allies itself with omnipotence, and becomes e channel along which the might of God can ss, as the electric current along the wire. Our -operation may be employed, but only to walk ound the walls, in the garb of priestly purity, and owing the rams' horns. "Hath not God made olish the wisdom of the world"?

But we must be holy. "Put off thy shoe from thy foot," said the Divine Warrior to Moses, for the place whereon thou standest is holy."
herever God is, there is holiness. Even Canaan holy, when God stands upon its soil. And we ust be holy if we would co-operate with Him. We ust put off the old man, with his affections and sts; we must cleanse ourselves from all filthiness the flesh and spirit; we must cast off the works darkness and array ourselves in the panoply of ht.

We know enough to be sure that He will not ally mself with the unfaithful or unclean, or have y association with us so long as we harbour an han with wedge of gold and Babylonish garment.
henever his faithful warriors are marshalled, num-rless as the dew from the womb of the morning, ey must be clad in the beauties of holiness. And He is to go forth with our armies, to deliver us, d to give up our enemies before us, we must be reful that the camp be holy, and that He see no clean thing in us and turn away (Deut. xxiii. 14).

PEACE SUNDAY is fixed for 18th inst. It is hoped at ministers of the Gospel may be generally willing advocate from their pulpits the sacred cause of ace, so dear to Him of whom the Christmas ason is a special reminder. Dr. W. Evans Darby, cretary, Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, E.C., ll be happy to send papers free of cost on the plying for the same.

NOTHING IS MORE IMPRESSIVE than the eager-

Lights and Shadows of Mission Work.

WISHING to be useful to younger brethren in evangelistic work, I feel I may devote one, at least, of these short papers to that most important branch of it—work in the open air. With twenty-two years of experience behind me, I have had full opportunity for noticing, on the human side of the question, most of the means used that apparently tend to its success, as also those that seem to militate against its sought results.

I began in "The Black Country," and in a part thoroughly imbued with Methodism. It was easy work there. I have had hundreds of people around me—sometimes, possibly, over a thousand; but I never remember the slightest opposition from collier, rivetter, nailer, or ironworker. There they would stand for an hour at a time, most of the men in their shirt-sleeves, nor was it any unusual sight for some fine stalwart fellow to be seen weeping like a child after the recital of an anecdote that had found its way to his heart.

In my next parish matters were altogether different. Various methods had to be employed to collect a congregation, and those deemed the most likely and best were not always too successful, for the first twelve months of my work. But then the leaflets that preceded the publication of "Songs and Solos" turned up; these proved a very "God-send." We had only to set the harmonium by the roadside, and begin "Whiter than snow," "Come to the Saviour," or "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and we had a host of listeners in a very few minutes.

I was, one night, preaching on a canal bank; the hymns had told, as usual, and drawn a crowd around my fellow-workers and myself; and as one MUST use anecdotes for an ordinary open-air gathering, I had told the effects of a hymn on a little "Black Country" lad. At the close of the story I cried out—"Friends! forget everything else that I have said, if you will, but remember the dying words of Willie Fletcher—'through Jesus Christ our Lord.' Yes, salvation is ALL through Jesus Christ our Lord." We then sang "Safe in the arms of Jesus." A little Irish boy had been among my hearers. His father had threatened to thrash him if ever he found he had been to our church; but to-night the child, who, even now, was doubtless under the Holy Spirit's influence, felt that he might listen and learn in comparative safety.

Soon afterwards, he was taken ill, and in his sickness began to cry out about his sins. The alarmed parents sent for their "priest," who apparently found himself quite unable either to enter into the boy's feelings or understand his fears. Some of our evangelists heard of the case, and visited him; but none of them could afford him comfort. At last, as I was told by his mother, and an invalid aunt whose bed had been near his, he cried out, "It is all through Jesus Christ our Lord," "It is all through Jesus Christ our Lord"; and then, as if remembering the finish of the meeting by the old canal, "Sing me 'Safe in the arms of Jesus,' mother," said he. "I cannot, my darling," she replied. "It does not matter, mother," he said, nor did it, for directly afterwards his chin fell on his breast, and he was, in the fullest sense of the words, "Safe in the arms of Jesus."

I have had strong reason to believe God has used me, through open-air preaching, on other occasions, to keep some of my hearers from self-murder. To drop a word of encouragement for those who have laboured long in this kind of work without seeing anything very definite in the way of results, I would remind them that like results may have been far more plentiful than ever dreamt of, in connection with their own ministry.

But, to be more practical, I would throw out a few hints to younger brethren that may be found useful by them in future work. In the first place, I would say, avoid all methods and refuse all help, that shall be calculated to draw contempt on the effort made, from the unconverted.

I was in a low part of London, but the "slum" folk among whom we went received us very kindly, and would have listened most attentively had it not been for a very little man who went on crutches, and made himself too forward with those around us. His misfortune would only have drawn me the more to him, but then nothing would do but he must dress himself up in a semi-military uniform; thus he not only made himself ridiculous in both his appearance and his vagaries, but he was constantly provoking laughter where we should otherwise have got respectful silence.

Then, I would say, always let the voice be kept under control. I would further say—Don't sing at all if there are not enough vocalists in the party to render a hymn properly; unless you are likely to find some musical talent in the crowd.

And yet, after all, by far the most important point to be considered in open-air preaching is the address itself. Too many imagine that anything will do for the street. It will not. It is perfectly true that only "the old, old story" will do helpless sinners good; but if, on the human side of the question, there is to be variety in the way of telling it, let the most thoughtful and attractive way be used here. It was recently remarked by a Christian lady that Satan once attempted to destroy the Church by persecution; that then, changing his tactics, he wrought against it by means of superstition; but that now, as a last effort, he is endeavouring to drown it in ridicule and scorn. I felt when hearing them that there was too much of truth in these words. Do any of my fellow workers feel with me? God forbid, then, that any of us should unconsciously aid the enemy of both our Divine Master and ourselves by doing, saying, or using, anything in either our indoor or outdoor work that shall rob the eternal verities we place before our hearers of their natural force.

AN EVANGELIST.

BLIND IN NORTH LONDON.

DEAR SIR,—We would be so glad if you would again remind your kind readers — who have materially helped our beloved blind more than once before—that the Somers Town Blind Aid Society is still carrying on its beneficent mission, and greatly needs the sympathy of God's givers. The year throughout has been one of hard work and great blessing; the toilers in very many instances have been permitted to see results in blind lives made better as well as brighter. We still have our regular Thursday gathering, to which our own two hundred blind and their guides eagerly flock in sunshine or in storm. So much are they appreciated that our large room is simply packed.

On December 22 we hope to have our "parcel night," when about 230 or more blind will be gladdened and greatly benefited by receiving each a good parcel of clothing or bedding, etc., with a gift also in money.

Over seventy ladies are visiting our members in their little homes—and become the close personal friends, advisers, and helpers of the one or the two whom they regularly visit. During the winter months we augment the number of our pensioners to over a hundred and fifty—these receiving from 4s. to 10s. per week, according to circumstances. In summer we sent many ailing blind to the seaside for a fortnight; and in all ways open to us we seek to aid these afflicted friends. May God put it into the hearts of many of your readers to befriend this Society, which is carried on entirely by voluntary workers, and at practically no working expense; which does not help in the mass, but knows and prayerfully considers the individual needs and character of its members; which seeks to instil and assist towards self-help and to make it possible for the blind to live in their own homes and among their own people, and which, above all else, does its utmost to lead its members to the loyal love and service of Him who alone is the light.

We will be glad to give full information or send reports to any friends.

(Mrs.) JESSIE HEPBURN STAREY, Hon. Sec.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A well-attended meeting of friends of this work on the South Cornish coast was held last week at Christ Church room, Chislehurst. Mr. John Bell (of the Orient Steamship Company) presided. The report of the hon. secretary (Mrs. A. P. Townend) was of a most cheering character, and showed that the sympathy and interest of Chislehurst friends were by no means diminishing, as nearly £200 had been raised by this branch during the past year. Addresses in support of the work were given by the Revs. Charles James, W. Fleming, LL.B., G. J. Hill, and W. Gregory, Mr. H. W. Maynard, and Mr. Sydney Townend. The latter, having just returned from Fowey, was able to give an interesting account of the good work being carried on at the Society's Home and Rest for Seamen in that port.

THE READING MISSION.

The short series of services held by Mr. Moody at Reading in November has left behind it a great blessing. It is not possible to give any numerical idea of the results of the work. Over 300 names of inquirers and converts were sent in, but these included only persons who were conversed with in the inquiry room. Many stricken ones went home to pray, and their names, not known to us, are registered in heaven with the mark, "Behold, he prayeth."

A thanksgiving meeting of the committee and workers was lately held in the Abbey Hall by invitation of Mr. Martin John Sutton, the chairman of committee. Some 400 persons were present. It was such a meeting as had probably never before been held in Reading. Christians of almost every denomination, Churchmen and Nonconformists, all animated with one joy, and fresh from a summertime of spiritual glow and refreshment, and from happy co-operation in one blessed work, gathered together to thank God for the great things He had wrought.

After tea and coffee had been served, Mr. Sutton took the chair, and in a few kindly words opened the meeting. Rev. S. H. Soole, of Greyfriars Church, offered prayer. In the absence of Rev. Hubert Brooke through illness, Rev. C. A. Davis, who had been associated with him in the conduct of the work amongst inquirers, made a statement concerning that part of the mission, showing that the inquirers were almost equally divided between men and women, and that they were connected with nearly every place of worship in the town. No work, said Mr. Davis, was more blessed than that of sitting down by the side of one convicted by the Spirit of God and pointing him to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. This had been the happy employment of more than seventy workers. He also referred to the efficiency of the stewards in their less enjoyable labours, and to the singing of the choir, which had been characterised by grace and power. He then led the meeting in thanksgiving to God.

After several other friends had spoken, Major Liebenrood told of a conversation he had with Mr. Moody at Oxford after the Reading Mission. Mr. Moody expressed the fear that Christian workers in England had grown lazy since he was here last. "In America," he said, "twenty-four hours after a convert's name had been taken, one of my workers is in his house." The converts should be visited in their homes as soon as possible.

The Chairman thought it would be a pity that the committee, which had been so happily employed, should cease to exist, and he suggested that it should be appointed as a permanent committee for united evangelistic work whenever occasion should offer. This suggestion was immediately acted upon, and a resolution to that effect was carried with enthusiasm.

Colonel Graves gave the closing address, urging the necessity of devout preparation for such work. They must never rest upon the missioner, who only comes to bring to a crisis what has been going on months or years before, and the mission when over should be followed up by crying to God to carry on the work. His address was full of wise counsel and suggestion.

On Sunday week a thanksgiving service was held in the Town Hall. There was a very large assembly. Mr. E. P. Collier presided; prayer and thanksgiving were offered by Revs. S. H. Soole and C. A. Davis; addresses were delivered by Rev. W. Armstrong and Mr. Percy Bateman; and a considerable number of persons in the meeting engaged in prayer. There was abundant evidence of the strong hold upon the town which the mission has taken.

Several interesting incidents have come to light in connection with this work. Two fellow-clerks attended one of the meetings together. One of them at the close went into the inquirers' room and decided for Christ. He told his friend afterwards what had taken place, and the friend was also led to the Saviour. The two told the joyful story to a third, a clerk in the same office, with the result that he also was converted, and so the circle of blessing widens.

A convert told out in the factory where he works the fact of his conversion, bringing upon himself much ridicule. God strengthen this young witness! "He that confesseth Me before men, him will I also confess before my Father which is in heaven."

Another story is deeply interesting. A young man had run away from his home in Gloucestershire. His father, discovering that he had gone to Reading, came on to seek him, and spent the day in fruitless search, until, in the evening, tired and disappointed, he went into the Town Hall. There, standing in the throng, he caught sight of his son. At the close of his address he and the son, both deeply impressed, went into the inquirers' meeting. They were both brought to Christ, and went home to Gloucestershire together, the father having found his wandering son, and both father and son having been found by the seeking Saviour.

Revival in Ireland.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN BANDON.

A most successful mission has lately been held in Bandon. After an absence of nine years Major Whittle returned, having lost none of his fire and vigour. He received an enthusiastic welcome from his old friends. On his former visit he was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, whose singing was so attractive. On the present occasion their places were well supplied by Mr. Stebbins and Miss Whittle.

A representative committee had been formed, composed of all the Protestant denominations, and one result of the mission is that a united prayer-meeting has been established. It is to be regretted that Episcopal clergymen held aloof from the movement, but their people were well represented. Major Whittle has an exceedingly simple and convincing method of presenting Gospel truth, and repeatedly emphasised the elementary matters which concern the salvation of souls.

The mission commenced under unfavourable conditions as regarded weather. But, notwithstanding the incessant downpour of rain, from the Sunday to the Wednesday, the meetings were well attended. The interest kept steadily increasing till the close. At the concluding Sunday services there was not standing room, and many had to turn away from the large town-hall in which the meetings were held. Undoubtedly Ireland is being opened up in a most remarkable way for the reception of the Gospel.

We wish Major Whittle and his gifted daughter and Mr. Stebbins God-speed in their mission of love throughout the towns and villages of the South of Ireland, and we have no doubt God will bless their labours. T. B.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL IN BELFAST.

Mr. Merton Smith, now well known as a co-worker of Mr. Moody's, has commenced a short mission in Belfast. The meetings have been held in Albert-street Church, of which Rev. Henry Montgomery is pastor. Begun in unpropitious weather, the attendances have been encouraging and nightly increasing.

The addresses of the evangelist have been marked by much simplicity and clearness. Mr. Smith has been emphasising the demerit of sin, and has kept constantly before the people the need of the new birth. He has not pressed for after-meetings, but has at the same time exhibited much spiritual skill in the meetings of those who without any urging remained for conversation and prayer. These meetings have been fruitful.

Mr. Smith is accompanied by Mr. J. Ritchie Bell, whose well-cultivated and sympathetic voice has been laid on the King's altar of service.

On Sunday last the evangelists had a busy day. An afternoon service crowded the spacious church, aisles, pulpit stairs, and every available spot being occupied. Mr. A. W. Vance and his male choir took part in the service of song, and rendered very sweetly the Gospel message. Mr. Ritchie Bell also sang very tenderly a piece not heard before in Belfast, entitled, "That is best of all." In the evening the building was again crowded, and large numbers waited for converse and prayer.

The meetings have been so encouraging that the evangelists, at the request of the people, are going on a second week, doubtless with deepening interest and increasing spiritual results. It is hoped that these gifted servants of the Lord may prolong their stay in Ireland and gather many sheaves for the Master within the borders of the Green Isle.

MISSES SMITH AND BAX IN SLIGO.

These ladies have closed a fortnight's mission in this western town. No day of the mission passed in which some souls did not profess to enter into peace. The requests for prayer were numerous, and some of these were blessedly converted into notes of praise. Amongst those who professed to enter into light were grey-headed men, slaves of drink, young men and maidens not a few, and little children whose hearts were gladly given to Jesus.

The consecration service on the morning of Sunday, Dec. 4, was a time of unusual power. At the praise meeting with which the mission closed 127 persons witnessed for Christ within the space of an hour, and many others subsequently gave testimony to blessings received. The services were held in the Methodist Church, but all denominations have shared in the Divine bounty.

Methodist Minister.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOME.

The nineteenth annual meeting was held in the Town Hall, on December 8th, the Mayor, Mr. R. D. Holt, presiding. The president of the Homes, Mr. Stephen Williams, M.P., made a short statement, and Mr. Francis M. Townsend, a Canadian, spoke weighty words from a Canadian point of view. Bishop Ryle presented the Liverpool view of the need of the work and its blessedness, to the widows and fatherless in this great seaport. Rev. T. J. Madden, who had been in Canada two months this summer, expressed delight with what he had seen of the unlimited openings there are for our young people who are active and industrious, especially girls of good moral character and sound ability in household duties.

On the following evening the annual gathering of some two hundred and fifty earnest mission workers (combining the Scripture-readers, town missionaries, special School Board visitors, and city Bible-women) were invited to tea by Mr. Williamson, M.P. The hundred young folk recently admitted to the home comforts were brought into the meeting, and, by their transformed appearance, greatly delighted the friends, many of whom had been the means of their rescue.

The widows' sewing class is in operation, and the Wednesday is the red-letter day for these poor lonely hearts. They sew on the young folks' outfits and so earn a sixpence which they all agree in saying goes farther than any other money. They feel prayer and blessing come with it from God. They are sorely grieved at the continued illness of their good and kind friend, Mrs. Samuel Smith. They are most earnest in prayer for her recovery.

The Robins' Christmas Feast comes off again in the grand St. George's Hall, and we expect to feed five thousand little ones. They look forward the whole year to this treat, and it is a most touching sight. I would fain transplant thousands of the children out of their abject wretchedness into happier surroundings under blue and sunny skies, with abundance of all they need.

REV. OSCAR MICHELSEN.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, missionary from Tongoa, who is on a short visit in England, recently addressed a public meeting in the Presbyterian Church, Crouch Hill, in which he explained his interesting work in the New Hebrides. Principal Oswald Dykes gave a weighty address on this occasion, on mission work in general. On Monday evening Mr. Michelsen attended a meeting of the Kilburn Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. He described some of the difficulties of translation into hitherto unwritten languages, and showed some of the beneficent results of Scripture circulation among barbarous races.

Mr. Michelsen will shortly proceed to the North of England to address meetings, and may extend his journey into Scotland. He is hoping in the second week of the New Year to begin a tour of some English towns, describing his work by the aid of lantern views. Friends wishing to promote this object, and at the same time to hear a thrilling story of missionary enterprise, may communicate with Mr. Michelsen at 57, Petherton-road, Mildmay, N.

A LITTLE GIRL in Manchester attended a Band of Hope meeting, and on the speaker remarking that the drink stripped homes of furniture, and women and children of their clothes, she excitedly exclaimed, "That's just what it does at our house." On reaching home, her father insisted upon sending her to the public-house for drink; arrived there, she dashed the money upon the counter, and passionately asked for threepennyworth of "strip-me-naked."

CHURCH PASTORAL AID SOCIETY.

A special effort by the Church Pastoral Aid Society to emphasise the needs of the home mission field culminated on Tuesday last week in a "United Meeting" in Exeter Hall. Mr. A. F. Buxton presided, and there was an influential attendance.

The first speaker was the Bishop of Durham, who moved a resolution "recognising the supreme responsibility of the Christian Church at the present day, in holding forth the light of truth amidst the darkness of indifference, irreligion, and sin which at present so largely prevails in our cities and towns." The same Gospel, he said, which has won its victories under other circumstances, has power to win fresh victories under present circumstances. There are many encouragements, notably in the fact that there was little open hostility to religion, although there was a wide indifference. The Bishop denied that indifference is peculiar to any one class. Why do not working-men go to church? is an oft-repeated question. He would rather inquire, Why do the middle classes and the upper classes go to church? The answer to both was the same: They follow the custom, the tradition of their class. Dealing with the second part of the resolution, the duty of the Church to meet the need described, the Bishop pressed home the fact that the responsibility is not upon the Christian ministry alone. The obligation rests upon every true believer to seek to bring others to Christ. It is not sufficient to find substitutes; all must bear their part in the glorious service.

The Bishop of Southwark, following, drew attention to the needs of South London. Speaking of the segregation of classes in that area, Dr. Yeatman pointed out that the district must cause the greatest anxiety to those responsible for the welfare of the people. The diocese of Rochester contains two million souls, and he computed that in London south of Thames there are fifty square miles of human beings waiting to be ministered to. But these masses are not idle. Every question is being discussed by them, criticism is their condition of life. He did not fear discussion, but the questions debated could only be solved by the application of truth, and that truth could only be taught by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He pleaded for the personal service of educated men and educated women, and then, in a final sentence, he said, "God in his mercy bless this Society in the work it is doing in this way, and bless you as part of it."

After a brief address by Sir T. Fowell Buxton, some hearty words were spoken by the Bishop of Liverpool. It is fifty years, said Dr. Ryle, since I first began to support the C.P.A.S. It is a great comfort to me to think that during those fifty years I have never changed my opinion one bit about its merits. The society has never hauled down its colours, and I trust that it never will.

Passing from the society's principles to its work, Dr. Ryle acknowledged his indebtedness to the society, which has made fifty-seven grants in his diocese. Describing the condition of the masses in our large towns, he went on to say that these people can be reached. The first step in promoting the everlasting Gospel is the employment of loving agents. Increase their number, turn them loose, and set them in the middle of these gross and dreadful populations with the Bible in their hands, and the grace of God in their hearts, and an understanding how souls are to be dealt with.

Canon Favell, of Sheffield, also delivered an address.

POOR JEWESSES OF JERUSALEM.

The mothers' weekly sewing meeting has been recommenced, after the several Jewish feasts and fasts, which occur during the month of October, when the Jewesses cannot work.

Our funds for buying materials being exhausted, we felt compelled to admit only the most needy; but many others plead so hard to be taken on. We have given preference to poor deserving widows with several children, and the wives of blind men, and invalids. The first part of the time is taken up by cutting out garments; then when all are at work, a text is learned, and hymns sung. At the close the missionary delivers an address on the text. Finally, we give them a cup of coffee and a roll of bread. We shall be thankful indeed if when our friends begin to feel the cold they will think of our poor Jewish sisters, many of whom have to pass the winter in wooden shanties. Agnes Ben-Oliel.

Jerusalem, Nov. 29.

CHURCH ASSOCIATION CALLS.

In response to calls issued by the Church Association, hearty Protestant meetings were held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday last week. In the morning and afternoon the gatherings were for Humiliation, confession of sin, and earnest prayer to Almighty God for "pardoning and restoring grace, and for the revival of Scriptural religion in the Church and Realm or England." Presided over by General Copland Crawford and Rev. Dr. Bullinger, these meetings were addressed by Mr. H. W. Maynard, Rev. S. Thelwall, Colonel Morton, and Rev. E. K. Elliott, and prayer was offered by various friends. In the evening a "Protestant demonstration" was held.

Lieut.-Col. Sandys, M.P., the chairman, remarked that by the Lincoln judgment certain portions of what they had known as the mass, which they thought was put away at the Reformation, could be permitted in church. The Church Association, though much vilified, resolutely stood forward as the voice of the Protestant members of the Church of England.

Rev. C. H. Wainwright pointed out that for 300 years the mass had been kept away from them, and they wanted to know what had happened in the last few years to produce the change which the late judgment had brought about. The truth was that the members of the Judicial Committee had forgotten their position as judges, and had assumed that of counsel for the defendant. As a matter of fact, the judges interrupted the counsel for the Church Association no less than 3236 times during the hearing of the appeal; or, in other words, at the rate of 300 times a day, or once every minute. Had this a semblance of justice? The Church of England was established for its Protestantism and for no other reason whatever. If the Church left its Protestantism, and went over to the Church of Rome, he for one would rather that it should be levelled to the ground.

Canon O'Connor having spoken, Sir Arthur Blackwood commended the Church Association and its new scheme to financial support. The Association intends to carry the war into the enemy's camp, To carry out their plan for three years would cost £11,000, and £5000 per annum afterwards. But this was not much for the "de-Romanising" and re-Protestantising of their Church,

Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston thought that the time had come to rouse the people. He felt, however, that the judgment of the Privy Council, which seemed to be a victory for the Ritualists, would ultimately lead to their utter defeat. The policy of the Church Association has many parts about it. They were urged to put as many Protestants as they could into Parliament. Well, that was a good thing. Then they were urged to elect Protestants to Convocation. That was also good, at any rate it could do no harm, though he did not much believe in Convocation. Then they were counselled to elect Protestants to the Diocesan Conferences. That, too, could do no harm, although for himself he would rather go into the coldest cupboard in his house, than attend Diocesan Conferences, so dull and cheerless were they. He had, however, nothing but praise for the policy of the Church Association on Education. In conclusion, he urged them to be true to the Lord, and "down with priestism."

BRIXTON Y.W.C.A.—A drawing-room meeting to celebrate the eleventh anniversary was lately held at 9, Effra-road. The report spoke of progress, the members numbering 225. Another member has gone to China, and one has offered for India. The Bible Home Mission has been much blessed during the year. The members met in large numbers at the institute for the annual tea on December 7. A move to more convenient premises is in contemplation.

HAVRE, FRANCE.—After an absence of four months in Scotland and London, I am returning to labour in mission work among the French and Bretons in this town and neighbourhood. I have endeavoured, by addressing meetings at Christchurch, Westminster Bridge-road (Rev. F. B. Meyer), Highbury Presbyterian Church (Rev. Dr. Edmond), and at the Monday prayer meeting Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, to show the religious needs of these people. If, as Christians, we realised the spiritual darkness and superstition that exists so very near to our shores, it would rouse us to a sense of responsility to give these neighbours the light of the Gospel. I shall be glad to communicate with interested friends. D. S. Mackenzie.

BRAY CONVENTION.

All visitors to Ireland know the beautiful shore of Bray, framed on one side by the bold headland from which it takes its name, which, clothed in its glory of purple heather and golden gorse, stands out boldly in the sapphire sea, which laps its base. In the summer the roads are gay with tourist-laden cars, as every outlet affords admirable views of mountain and woodland and rock, but now the hills are almost Alpine in their snow-crowned loveliness, and the roads are, as a rule, comparatively deserted.

On Monday and Tuesday last, however, eager groups might have been seen converging quickly to one secluded spot where, happy in the possession of a beautiful hall (the gift of love to the memory of a venerated pastor), the present vicar, Rev. Thos. Hackett, had called together a few of those who desired the deepening of their spiritual life—"closer communion with God and fuller service through our Lord Jesus Christ." With glad surprise it was found that many from the neighbouring districts desired to gather with these blessed ends in view; some preparing for the mission field and other Christian workers had never before attended a convention, and truly for them and for all a feast of fat things was prepared. God's children of various names and divergent theological views were united in fervent charity and glad expectancy in response to the key-note of the president, "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it."

Rev. E. Daunt warned us of the need of Holy Ghost power if we are to follow Christ, basing his thrilling remarks on our Lord's warning to his too impetuous disciple, "Thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me afterwards."

The Archdeacon of Glendalough linked the promises of 2 Cor. vi. 16, 18, with the threefold command of the opening verse of the following chapter; while Rev. C. Inwood, whose trumpet note of warning at Keswick still ringing in many hearts, brought us face to face with the fulness of the promises and the absolute claims of Christ as King.

Professor Mackintosh cleared away many doubts and difficulties. The possibility of walking so as to please God prefaced a second and most encouraging address on St. John vi., "Jesus the Supplier, the Bread of our Life, the Keeper and the Abiding Friend," by Rev. H. Fishe, while Rev. W. E. Burroughs emphasised the truth that all God's wonderful blessings in Christ are absolute gifts to be received by the outstretched hand of faith, while yet the life is to be lived out moment by moment in dependence upon Him, and so, as the pendulum ticking obediently travels 3000 miles in a year, mighty works are done, not by one grand effort, but by daily acts of lowly obedience.

These happy days are now amongst the things that are past which the Lord requireth. The many favourite teachers have left us, but the exceeding great and precious promises whereby we "are made partakers of the Divine nature" remain, and our King abideth and all the promises of God are in Him, yea, and in Him amen, to the glory of God by us. E. W. Grove Benson.

The Bible in Brittany.

Le Trémélois, the organ of the Breton Evangelical Mission, states:—They write to us from the neighbourhood of Huelgoat (Central Brittany) as follows:—

"We went the other day to a fair not far from here, and as we spoke from our Bible carriage of the love of God to poor sinners, a young man of seventeen asked us if the words we had spoken were in the Bible? We answered yes. With joy and thankfulness he took a copy of the Book and ran across to the other side of the fair, where an hour and a-half afterwards, on passing we found him lying on the ground, blood coming from his mouth and nose. He had been beaten by a woman, who, tigress-like, was enraged against him.

"I begged this woman to stop beating him. Immediately she seized me by the throat, but the poor youth was able to get up and separate us. Two days afterwards, on his mother (for it was his mother who beat him thus for getting a Bible) leaving the house the youth sent for me. I found him laid on a bed of agony, and he died in my arms crying out, 'Peace! peace! God has pardoned all my sins! Thus he left the world a martyr to his love for the Bible."

IT IS SAID that nearly every publican in Cromer is in favour of the Sunday closing of public-houses.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

There was a large assemblage of friends at the fifteenth annual meeting of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, on Friday last. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, whose few words evinced warm sympathy with the excellent work of which the Rest is the home and centre.

A deeply-interesting outline of the year's operations was given by Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, the hon. sec. There are many discouragements, yet there is abundant cause for thanksgiving. During the past twelve months many sailors have met with the Saviour in the rooms of the Rest, which has continued to afford them a safe place of call, in which they may write letters and always find solicitous friends. There have been the usual meetings every afternoon and evening; and voluntary workers attend and lay the Gospel before men of many lands in their own tongues. Altogether fifteen hundred meetings were held in the Rest during the year, to say nothing of the visits to common lodging-houses and work at the dock-gates. The sailors were provided with portions of the Word of God and helpful Gospel literature, and these they have taken to the ends of the earth. The system of correspondence with the men continues, with very interesting results.

Having mentioned that the work proceeds on distinctly unsectarian lines, Mr. Isaac observed that there is not a single department but what might be extended if there were reinforcements. Any lady or gentleman who can spare one or two afternoons during the week may find here an outlet for Christian sympathy and a sphere of work of a very encouraging nature. A regrettable intimation was that, although the entire expenditure of the year is less than £400, the balance-sheet showed a deficit of £100. During the Christmas season there will be the customary festivities, for which friends may send helmets, socks, steering gloves, needle books, and other useful articles, to be presented to the men.

Mr. W. Noble, treasurer, having made a financial statement, Dr. W. T. Moore delivered a stimulating address, deriving important lessons from our Lord's saying to the Jews: "If I do not the works of my Father, believe Me not" (John x. 37). Christ did not want men to believe in Him unless He did the works of his Father. So Christians should judge of each other's work. One may not believe in the theology of another, but the works, being worthy of God, must be believed in. And he was convinced that Christian unity may be most easily realised in combined work for Christ.

The Chairman read a telegram from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, whose heart has of late been exercised with a desire that a great effort should be made to offer the Gospel to foreigners in London. He urged special prayer on this point. Miss Macpherson followed with a few hearty words. The next speaker was Pastor Fuller Gooch, who enlarged upon the Lord's gracious employment of human agency in executing his designs. Miss Steer invited the prayerful co-operation of Christian workers in efforts to deal with the drink traffic in East London. Rev. Wm. Pierce also spoke some words of hearty sympathy.

MINE FOR EVER.

Mine Thou art, yea, mine for ever,
Rest and Refuge of my soul!
Time and change shall rob me never
While the endless ages roll.

Mine Thou art, my own for ever,
Dying Lamb, and reigning Lord!
Gift of love! divine Life-giver!
My "exceeding great reward."

Mine Thou art, O Christ! for ever!
All things now are mine in Thee:
Death itself is gain—ah! never Shall my riches fade nor flee.

Mine Thou art, to-day, for ever:
Mine to comfort, keep, and guide,
Till beyond the rolling river
I behold Thee glorified.

Mine Thou art, yea, mine for ever—
Mine though earthly empires fall.
Precious Portion! perfect Saviour!
"First and Last!" my "All in All!"

ROYALTY AND YOUNG WOMEN.

H.R.H. Princess Christian, who has in many ways shown her interest in the work of the Young Women's Christian Association, gave a further proof of practical sympathy by opening on Tuesday, December 6, a sale of work at the Morley Hall, Regent-street. The object of this second visit of the Princess was to help forward the enlarged work, caused by the transference six years ago to these buildings of the Central London Institute, which was for many years located in Old Cavendish-street. The latter premises are still used as the offices for London Work, Travellers' Aid, Park Mission, and the Domestic Employment Agency, carried on by Miss Gough. The Institute, which numbers over 1000 members, is now centred at Morley Halls, where the spacious reading-rooms, gymnasium, etc., give greater facilities for meeting the varied needs of the many young women who here seek rest, society, spiritual or secular instruction, or safe shelter in one or two boarding-houses connected with the place.

One special feature of this sale has been that it has brought together and utilised the talents of high and low, rich and poor, and happily exemplified the real links of harmony and goodwill that bind all together. The stalls were not only furnished by ladies of means interested in the association, but one beautiful art stall was entirely provided by one member, herself the daughter of an artist, and another by the united efforts of members, who themselves hard at work all day, gave up their leisure evening hours to plying their needles in the manufacture of tasteful fancy articles and useful garments. Various business firms kindly contributed, also the Goldsmiths and Silversmiths' Company, Regent-street, sent £10 10s. worth of silver articles.

Though this special effort has succeeded, the committee greatly desire more annual subscribers, so as to make the work self-supporting. Any help of this kind would be gratefully received by the Hon. Sec., 316, Regent-street, W.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.

The friends who carry on this most excellent institution at Inverness are now seeing, in an increasing measure, the fruits of their labours. For twelve years the orphans have been sheltered, fed, clothed, and trained with judicious care. The same solicitude is being shown in getting for them suitable situations, under employers who will conserve the spiritual as well as the temporal interests of these young lads and lasses entering on the serious business of life.

Some of the boys are apprenticed to different trades in Inverness, and a desire is expressed in the report just issued that a Christian home could be provided for these under one roof, so that there characters might be shaped and directed at a critical period in their career. We trust some Christian couple in the town will undertake this privileged task. Encouraging accounts come from the other side of the Atlantic with respect to some of the girls who have settled there with good prospects. There has been an average of sixty children in the orphanage during the past year.

Mr. M. Elliot, as treasurer, and Mr. George Walker, as secretary, who are the founders of the institution, continue their labours of love on behalf of the fatherless and friendless in the North of Scotland. We earnestly trust their hands will be well sustained by the gifts, not only of those in the districts concerned, but of all who are connected with or interested in the Highlands of bonnie Scotland.

NURSES AND NURSING.—In our notes, last week, on this subject, a clerical error gave the address of the Nursing Sisters' Institution as 41, instead of 4, Devonshire-square, E. The rates mentioned are charges for services, and not payments to nurses. One guinea is charged for non-infectious cases, and a guinea and a half for infectious cases.

SOUTHWARK.—For eighty-three years an excellent work has been carried on at Castle Yard Sunday-school, Holland-street, Southwark, a branch of the Southwark Sunday-school Society, which was established in 1799. On Wednesday evening, Dec. 7, the annual meeting of former scholars and teachers was held. Rev. Robert Tuck (a former teacher and treasurer at Castle Yard) and other friends addressed the meeting. Mr. Arthur Smith, superintendent, detailed the many operations carried on.

MRS. BOOTH'S BIOGRAPHY.

This eagerly expected publication has at length appeared in two handsome well-printed volumes.* It is certain of a cordial and world-wide welcome, which it well deserves. The first thing we are constrained to say is that General Booth and his family have been specially happy and fortunate in their choice of an historian. Mr. Booth-Tucker has made splendid use of the ample materials placed at his disposal, and has produced a record of modern religious life and movement that will take high rank among the biographies of the century. Though one in spirit and aim with his illustrious mother-in-law, he has not allowed close relationship and intimate acquaintance to bias his pen in portraying a truly remarkable and fruitful life. He has not canonised our departed sister; though, of course, he has written con amore throughout, and has naturally eschewed altogether the critical function so far as his special subject is concerned. The task was a difficult one, but it must in fairness be said that the writer has discharged it admirably. Judging of the whole from those parts of the late Mrs. Booth's career with which we are familiar, we should say that we have in these intensely absorbing volumes a faithful transcript, within the limits assigned, of the unique character and experiences of "the Mother of the Salvation Army."

After reading this biography, we see how true and just is that somewhat high-sounding appellation. We all knew Mrs. Booth's wonderful force of character, strenuousness of intense spiritual feeling and conviction, and marvellous ability in commending to the public attention and sympathy in its early stages that outbreak of religious fervour and aggressiveness which now overspreads a great part of the globe, under the banner of the Salvation Army. But it will be a revelation to many readers to find how largely and deeply she influenced and moulded the character and career of Mr. Booth in the early days of his Christian service, and even before she bore his name. The wives of public men have often shaped and coloured for good or ill the course of their after life, but we doubt if there is another such example as this in all recorded history, of a woman who during the period of betrothal so impressed the stamp of her own ideas and convictions on the one who was afterwards to become her partner in life. No doubt the influence exercised was mutual, for Mr. Booth, as may be believed, showed a very strong individuality in his youthful days; yet in the correspondence given here we come on instances time after time when he was downcast or in doubt as to his course of action, and it was then that Catherine Mumford (for that was her maiden name) held aloft the banner of unswerving faith in God and consecration to his will as she understood it. In many a troublous hour during those days, marked by keen aspiration after a useful sphere, and by ample discouragement and thwarting on the part of those who should have acted very differently, Mr. Booth was nerved to courage and to persistent endeavour by the brave and helpful and high-souled counsel she gave him in her letters. This part of the biography may be earnestly commended to all Christian young men and women holding towards each other the same interesting relation.

The volumes embrace not a few points that are calculated to excite controversy, and it would have been well, we think, if some chapters criticising the views of fellow Christians had been omitted. We hope to refer again to the book when we have had time to give it a more thorough examination. Meantime, we promise intending readers, especially those who are admirers of Army work and friends of its founders, that an undoubted treat is in store for them in its perusal.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—At the last muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew a special note of praise was offered for the encouragement received at the free suppers throughout the past month. A large number of destitute seamen have been temporarily relieved, whilst the Gospel found hearts ready to receive. The text for the month was given by Miss Child: "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." It was ably commented on by Mr. John Toner, and became the keynote of the meeting. Some thrilling incidents were given by seafaring men.

"YE BELONG TO CHRIST."

Matthew ix. 41.

ADDRESS BY REV. G. ELDER, GREENWICH.

How nice it is to belong to somebody! How sad would be to be nobody's child, without any bond love to another. All you little people belong to ur father and mother. They have watched over n ever since you were born; they have worked for n, prayed for you, cared for you in a way you will ver understand until perhaps you are grown up. But here in this text is something of much more portance. It says:—"Ye belong to Christ." ur parents form the link that binds you to earth; re is the link that binds you to God. It tells t though you live on earth, your home is in ven.

What does it mean? For one thing it means that h of you are of Jesus Christ's belongings. Not very long ago, in the Southern States of America, ys and girls were taken to the market-place to be d. A man would come and examine them one one. He would see who was the strongest and t for his purpose. When he made a selection he uld pay down the price which the slave-owner ked, and so the boy or the girl would be transferred m one master to another. The new master would ry them home with him and say, "This boy or s girl belongs to me. I have bought them at the rket. I have paid the price put upon them."

Jesus can say the same about you. Men are slaves sin; an evil master holds them in cruel bondage. us gave his own life as a ransom to bring you o freedom. He bought you, so you belong to n.

Remember that Jesus will always acknowledge belongings. There are some men who have r parents. They have risen to high social posi- ns. Perhaps they have made a lot of money, l so they do not care to acknowledge their poor ations. Jesus is the King of Kings, but He will er forget you. He will never forego his claim n you. Before the great assemblage of angels l men He will acknowledge every little boy and l that belongs to Him.

This question has another side. You are not to ashamed to acknowledge Christ as your belong- s. Sitting in church you may think that is a y easy matter; but what about to-morrow? You y meet with other boys and girls who may make nock of your praying and reading the Bible. They y try to get you to imitate them in oaths and ay speaking. It will not be so easy then to nowledge Christ.

Once a friend of Jesus was very fond of boasting his friendship with Jesus, and that nothing uld ever make him sacrifice it, and a girl came e day and looked him in the face, and taxed him h walking with Jesus. All at once he denied t he knew Jesus at all. Then another came and ed him with being a companion of Jesus, and he lied that he did not know what she was talking ut; for the third time the people who stood nd insisted that he must be a friend to the man o was being tried for his life. With bitter words l cursing he denied that he knew him at all. Do think that you are stronger than Peter? Where fell we must be very careful.

It is theft to give away what belongs to another. not you give yourself away to the evil one, and back to the slavery and the bondage from which rist has made you free.

LEFT ALONE.

The winter night was chill and dark,
The snow lay on the ground,
The silver chimes rang out the hours
With clear and startling sound:
The warm light from the public bar
Streamed full upon the way,
And made the darkness gloomier,
And killed the dying day.

Within, a man, unkempt and flushed,
Harangued the noisy crowd,
Who hung upon each foolish jest
With laughter, long and loud;
There all was warmth and merriment,
But just across the way,
High up above the narrow street,
Two babes knelt down to pray.

Their little lips were blue with cold,
Their clothing torn and thin,
And through the cracked and broken panes
The wind came rushing in;
Hand clasped in hand they lisped these words,
"O, dearest Lord, to-day
Send back our father from the man
Who lives across the way.

"He used to be so good and kind,
And never said us nay,
When after work we climbed his knee,
So glad with him to play;
But now he never kisses us,
His voice is harsh and thick,
And when we play he makes us stop,
And beats us with his stick.

"He cried so when dear mother died
And we were left alone,
And all night long we listened
As we heard him sigh and moan;
But now he never seems to care,
And worse, he doesn't pray.
Oh, make him good, and save him from
The man across the way."

Again the song and laughter came Adown the narrow street,
A good and evil angel passed
Each other, still and fleet;
One went within the golden gates
The bearer of a prayer,
The other gathered up the words
That shocked the silent air.

Their prayer was ended; supperless
Upon a ragged bed,
The weary little children laid
Each aching, curly head.
The evening star in pitying mood,
Sent down a silver ray,
That helped to cheer their loneliness,
And drove black night away.

Now sharper grew the frosty night,
And brighter burned each star,
And still the merry laugh rang out
From that bright public bar;
Like fragile blossoms, sweet and pale,
Exposed to every blast,
They slept their sleep of innocence,
While time was fleeting fast.

A heavy step is in the room:
With flushed and aching head
And staring eyes the father flings
Himself upon his bed.
For hours he sleeps; the children still Lie motionless close by:
He, waking, finds no meal prepared,
And shakes them angrily.

He shrank to feel their chilly touch;
Then wild and shrill a cry
Rings out into the silent street,
Up to the startled sky.
A pitying angel in the night
Had carried them away
To join the happy boys and girls
Who, mid Heaven's brightness play.

No cold, no hunger now was theirs,
No tears henceforth would stain
Their cheek; in heaven there is no cold,
No hunger and no pain.
The father sat in mute despair
Like Cain, he longed to flee.
Far, far away to some lone spot,
Where none his guilt could see.

For was he not a murderer?
Uncared for and unfed,
His little helpless children died
Within their lonely bed:
His soul was filled with deep remorse,
He vowed that, from that day,
His foot should never tread again
The house across the way.

He kept his word, but never smile
Was seen upon his face,
His comfort was in visiting
His children's resting place;
A simple little pauper grave,
O'ergrown with grass and flowers,
Where, weeping hot and silent tears,
He loved to sit for hours.

ALICE M. STEVENS.

TO OUR COMRADES IN H.M.S.

DEAR SIR,—May we ask you kindly to grant us sufficient space to invite the attention of our comrades in Her Majesty's services to a matter which immediately concerns them, and truly commands their earnest consideration, sympathy, and support. We refer to a certain important sphere of Miss Robinson's work at Portsmouth.

A few months ago the "soldiers' mother" parted with her large "Speedwell Coffee Palace," situate at the Landport end of the town, as it was felt that a much larger hall, etc., was needed for the most important spiritual work here carried on under the assiduous and loving care of Mr. T. Hogben, evangelist. The larger premises, designated were immediately commenced—the services meanwhile being held in a music-hall hired for the purpose while for after-meetings a temporary iron room has been erected. But soon a cessation took place in the work of building, owing to the lack of requisite funds to go forward. We believe this has been keenly felt, as from personal experience we know the great hindrance caused to God's work by want of these mission premises—children constantly having to be turned away from the iron room, and adults from the music hall.

Having regard to these circumstances, it has occurred to us that it is a most fitting time for soldiers and sailors to show their appreciation of, and to prove their gratitude for, the untiring efforts of this Christian lady on their behalf, by subscribing something, however small the amount, towards the urgent need referred to. We, the undersigned, would very earnestly recommend comrades of both arms of the service to forward some small "mite" to the same quarter, to be handed to Miss Robinson towards the expenses of building these new mission quarters.

We can personally testify to the good work done at this mission on behalf of our comrades, for though organised principally for civilians (a large proportion of whom are reserve men and pensioners), many soldiers and sailors are regularly and constantly being helped out of the darkness and bondage of sin and vice into the light and liberty of the salvation of Jesus Christ.

We put forth, then, this entirely unsuggested appeal from a few soldiers to their comrades for all of them who feel interest in Miss Robinson's work to rally round her, and give tangible evidence of their appreciation of loving, ungrudging labours—their wish to assist their comrades into the way of life—and above all their desire to help forward the work of God generally in a place where the devil's seat has too long had the pre-eminence.—We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

A. E. SIMS, Sergeant-Major, Staff Clerk.
E. J. COOPER, Quartermaster Sergeant.
T. WILLIAMS, R.M.S.S., H.M.S. Victory Depôt.
S. G. HARVEY, Sergeant, M.S. Corps.

PARIS.—The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A. recently held its annual meeting in the Wesleyan Chapel. The secretary reported on a year of successful work, and a number of friends spoke in hearty commendation of the institution.

TREATS TO BOARDMEN.—During the Cattle Show just held at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, Mr. J. Dix Lewis and a few good helpers at Sermon-lane Mission have been making special efforts to reach the boardmen—many of whom are in a sadly forlorn condition—by inviting such to soup suppers. These were twice given to some 400 poor fellows who listened gladly to the Gospel sung and spoken. The men behaved splendidly, and seemed thankful for and in some cases impressed by the Gospel message delivered.

Dr. Clough of Ongole.

This week London has been favoured with the presence of one of the most highly honoured of living missionaries, Dr. J. E. Clough, of the American Baptist Telegu Mission at Ongole, India. In the month of May last year he was passing through this city on his way to America, grievously sick. At that time we were privileged to record in outline the wonderful story of his work among the Telegus. The history of the Lone Star Mission, as it was called in its early and dark days, is certainly one of the real romances of modern Christianity. After more than thirty years of patient, prayerful, tearful sowing the reaping time came, and the harvest was a thousand-fold.

Dr. Clough returned to America last summer primarily to seek restored health; but a part of his plan was to secure reinforcements in the shape of twenty-five new missionaries for the Telegus and to raise £10,000 for their equipment. This he had faith to believe he would, by God's mercy, accomplish in a year. He did accomplish it, and more. While in America he added to his programme a project for raising a second £10,000 for the endowment of a college at Ongole, so as to further the education of the native converts. At the missionary anniversary in Philadelphia last May Dr. Clough was able to report that the immediate goal he had set before him was reached, so far as men and money were concerned. His health, unhappily, was not sufficiently restored to permit of his longed-for return to India at once. That was little wonder when one thinks of the amount of continuous work he had gone through. He was persuaded to go for a season to the well-known sanatorium at Dansville, N.Y., under the care of Dr. Jackson, editor of Laws of Life. He stayed there till Dr. Jackson gave him "a clean bill of health," and pronounced him fit to return to India, if he would only be careful of himself.

And now this grand old veteran is on his way back to the land and the field of his adoption. Of the twenty-five new male missionaries he wanted nineteen have already gone forth to Telegu-land, some of them having taken with them wives. It is a very interesting circumstance that two of these wives are Dr. Clough's own daughters. Miss Nellora Clough (named after Nellore, one of the principal stations of the mission) has gone to India as the wife of Professor Martin, of Ongole College. The second daughter, Miss Ongola (so called after Ongole), is now married to Rev. Mr. Curtis, another of the band of fresh workers. The remaining six workers to make up the twenty-five are under appointment to proceed to their posts when their studies are completed. Besides these, five single ladies have gone to work among the Telegus, two or three being qualified doctors. These new workers Dr. Clough declares to be all of a high order—not a second-class man or woman among them. God be praised that they are laying their gifts and acquirements on his altar for the highest and noblest of human service!

Dr. Clough's third daughter, it may here be added, is studying in Wellesley College, near Boston, U.S.; and his wife also remains in America for the present.

As to the money needed, Dr. Clough, with the sanction of the Mission Executive, undertook to raise it all by his personal efforts. Before last Christmas, by dint of unsparing labour, he had secured £11,000 for the new extension. Then he bent his back to the task of getting £10,000 for the Missionary College, and, as we have stated, he was able to inform the friends gathered for the Missionary Centenary in Philadelphia that the money was in hand. It was given mostly in large sums by wealthy Christians; indeed, one friend, Mr. John D. Rockfeller, gave the second £5000. The total sum is now invested at good interest, and forms a permanent endowment for the institution.

Dr. Clough admitted, in reply to a question by our representative who interviewed him, that he had overlooked one little item in his calculations. When making his appeals to his fellow-countrymen, he quite forgot the need of seats for the college chapel, a library, some chemical apparatus, and gymnastic appliances, so as to make the initial equipment of the institution complete. For these purposes some £200 or £300 will be sufficient, and we cannot for a moment doubt that some of the friends of missions in this country will contribute the amount. The American brethren have given handsomely and heartily for the sustenance of the mission, which they have so long and so earnestly maintained on British soil. It would be a peculiarly graceful act on the part of British Christians to supply this little lack. In doing so they would be honouring themselves, while aiding their devoted American fellow Christians; and, we believe the gift, small though it is, would do much to cement the bonds of friendship between the Christians of both countries. We need not say that we shall have special pleasure in forwarding to Dr. Clough any sums that may be entrusted to us for this object.

In the college at Ongole there are about a hundred Christian students, besides a hundred and fifty others drawn from Mohammedan, Brahmin, Sudra, and other sections of the Telegu people. It is expected that the number of students will soon be considerably increased.

Last Sabbath evening Dr. Clough preached at Dr. Sinclair Paterson's Presbyterian Church in Notting Hill, and greatly interested the congregation by an hour's talk on missions. He also spoke at the noon prayer-meeting in Aldersgate-street on Monday and Tuesday last. We have not space in our present issue for any of the deeply interesting details of his work that he then gave. The large numbers present on both occasions were inspired and gladdened by his recitals of the Divine working among these heathen people; and none of his praying friends, we feel sure, will be more constant in their remembrance of this venerated and venerable missionary brother, than those who assemble from day to day at Aldersgate-street for the hour of praise and prayer.

Dr. Clough left London on Wednesday for the Continent, and expects to sail from Brindisi to Bombay on Christmas Day.

A NOBLE LIFE.

Many of the lives that are most marked by true dignity and nobility never come much within the public ken; they flourish and ripen better in the shade than in the garish light of popular éclat. Such a one was Canon George Butler, some memorials of whose eminently useful career have been written by his distinguished wife, Mrs. Josephine Butler.* It is a charming wifely tribute to the excellences and real Christian worth of a departed husband. The light it throws on the possibility of an ideal state of wedded happiness and mutual helpfulness makes it a book that calls for the widest acceptance in social circles.

There are few women in modern times who have sacrificed so much, endured so much, and accomplished so much for the good of humanity at large, and womanhood in particular, as Mrs. Butler. That she was able to stand such a continuous strain on a naturally fragile constitution, and to extract victory many a time from what seemed impassable hindrances and difficulties, was due in great measure to the complete sympathy and courageous unwavering support of her husband. His nature was cast in a noble mould, and he was the essence of truth and honour. A man of great natural abilities and ample intellectual acquirements, he was fitted for high public office in Church or State, if he had chosen to aspire after it. He preferred rather to adopt the less prominent but not less important rôle of an educationalist. His high-pitched nature revolted at the evils fostered by a low and unequal standard of social morality and by inadequate legislation, and he encouraged in every way the noble crusade for "purer manners, juster laws," in which his wife bore so heroic a part. Would that all the gifted and cultured sons of England, who are to be her future legislators and rulers, might read and profit by this ably and delightfully written biography.

A STATISTICAL ABSTRACT issued by the national council shows the very rapid growth of Y.M.C.A. work during the past ten years. In the English Union associations now exist at 394 centres, whereas in 1883 there were 188 only; and there are 31,826 members and 24,867 associates reported, compared with totals respectively of 17,611 and 11,526, while the value of buildings owned by associations has increased during the same period from £153,637 to 371,395. There were throughout the world 2528 centres in 1883; now there are 2982.

MR. CHAMPNESS AND HIS WORK.

The noon prayer-meeting at Aldersgate-street on Monday was specially favoured. It is not often that two such notable representatives of home and foreign work as Rev. Thomas Champness and Dr. Clough are on its platform on the same day. Of the latter we have already had something to say. We wish that we could devote as much space to our gifted friend Mr. Champness, who is not only taking his full share of home work, but sustaining a hundred missionaries in different parts of the world-field.

In his short talk on Monday he was as sparkling, as vivacious, as colloquial, and as unreportable as ever. At the outset he said some excellent things about preachers explaining in a simple way the deep mysteries of the Christian faith, so as to meet the case of humble hearers not well versed in theology. These remarks were evoked by one of the requests for prayer from a woman troubled about the doctrine of the Atonement.

Passing to more personal matters, Mr. Champness praised God for the way in which He is leading him out in his foreign work. He has just dispatched four workers to China, a noble revenge upon the Chinese for the murder of Mr. Argent, who was a Joyful News Missionary. Mr. Champness has sent his eldest son as one of the four; so that he, as well as Dr. Clough, has given hostages from his own family for the foreign field. He told of a north-country man who said, "It is all very well to give other folk's children to be missionaries; but there must be summat in it when the gentleman sends his own boy." Mr. Champness added, for himself, that there was great joy in it. His boy had been his own companion, with whom he had often taken sweet counsel, and he had great joy in giving God of his best for the work. Another member of the party had once been a wild, bad youth, who was won to Christ by the consistent life and testimony of a lad who patiently resisted all efforts made to lead him astray. So this humble unknown lad, whose name (said Mr. Champness) is never likely to be in print till they take an order for his coffin, was the instrument in the salvation of one who has been a useful worker at home, and will be the means of leading many to Christ in China. Here is encouragement for those who think they are nobody, and never will be anybody. If one cannot be an artist's pencil, he may be the knife to sharpen it; and without the knife the pencil can never be anything but a skewer.

Another delightful little story that came into Mr. Champness' talk was about the distribution of the £3000 that the Chinese Government paid as indemnity for the murder of Mr. Argent. The mother of this missionary martyr is a poor woman living in a cellar below an East End chapel, which she keeps clean and bright. She declared she would not take this £3000, but Mr. Champness insisted that he could not face the Chinese Government if she did not make some use of it. At last she consented to receive out of it £1 a week. A new school is being built at the chapel to be called after her son William, and she gave £100 towards that. Then she gave £250 towards the building of a hospital in China in memory of her son. The balance over, after the amount invested for her weekly pittance, she gave to Mr. Champness, who had used it in sending these four workers to China. So the blood money that came from China is to a large extent going back to that land as love and salvation money.

Some lively exhortations fell from Mr. Champness' lips about Christians being the most joyful people in the world—not merely being cheerful day by day, but now and then giving a good downright shout of joy for Him who is the Rock of our salvation. He also told an amusing family episode about his father and mother and their large family being so poor that they had to sit in chapel in a free seat. But out of that free seat great things for God had sprung. His brother, he said, is a prince in his way, giving his money like a king; and here was himself, a preacher and worker, and overseer of a hundred evangelists—all out of that free seat!

There is no more welcome face or voice in this prayer meeting than that of Mr. Thomas Champness.

DURING ONE WEEK recently, twenty-five publicans were made bankrupts, nineteen made deeds of composition, and eleven had bills of sale.

REV. HAMILTON TOWNSHEND, M.A.,

DEAN OF ACHONRY.

THE announcement that the Dean of Achonry will speak at a meeting is usually sufficient to guarantee a good audience, for he is now generally recognised as one of the most eloquent speakers in the ranks of Protestant advocacy. His ready wit and silvery tones prove wonderfully attractive; and more than once we have seen a turbulent hostile assembly hushed and subdued beneath the potent spell of his glowing utterance. Certainly, he is much more than an orator, but undoubtedly this is the feature in his personality that most impresses hearers on this side of St. George's Channel.

HAMILTON TOWNSHEND entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1844, and graduated in 1848, obtaining the Bedell Scholarship during his course. Appointed to the curacy of Kilcommon-Erris, or Belmullet, co. Mayo, he was instrumental in getting the glebe house and church of Poulathomas built, the funds for which were collected by Mrs. Inglis, of Richmond, Surrey, a sincere and devoted worker for Christ, and a true lover of her country.

Mr. Townshend became rector of Ballyovie, Diocese of Tuam, in 1850. During his ministry a congregation was formed and a church built, as were also two schoolhouses. But the dangers and difficulties were great. Mr. Townshend and the Irish Church Missions, under which he worked at that time, soon encountered the most determined opposition from the Romish priests and their helpers. In August, 1851, his house was attacked, shots were fired into his bedroom, the bullets passing within a few inches of his head. In the parish there was, and still is, a monastery of Franciscan friars, who were active opponents to the circulation of the Scriptures and the preaching of the Gospel. On several occasions they publicly burned copies of the Scriptures. When it was ascertained that this was an indictable offence, the principal in the transactions, a monk called Brother John, was brought to trial at the Mayo Spring Assizes, Castlebar, in 1852. The case was tried before the late Baron Lefroy, the monk being defended by the late Mr. Justice Keogh, who was then a barrister on circuit. Brother John was convicted, and was liable to two years' imprisonment with hard labour, but, on the appeal of counsel for the defence, and on undertaking that the Bible burnings should cease, he was admitted to bail, to come up for judgment when called upon. The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, Dr. MacHale, and all the priests of the diocese, together with Mr. Frederick Lucas, then editor of the Tablet, supported the monk, and approved of his conduct.

Meantime Mr. Townshend's congregations increased so rapidly that the room in the Bishop's lodge, where service was first held, could not contain them. Then a barn was obtained, and finally a beautiful church was built on the shores of the now notorious Lough Mask. A most interesting congregation was formed, and though they were reduced in numbers after Mr. Townshend's departure, and subjected to many trials from time to time, the Word of Life is still preached there each Lord's day. At first, owing to the mixed character of the congregation, part of the service was conducted by Mr. Townshend in Irish. For twelve years he continued rector of that parish, during which time he was exposed to several murderous attacks and outrages. His out-offices were burnt down, and one of his parishioners, who had been formerly his servant, and then became ploughman to the Bishop, was murdered in 1860. His own life was threatened repeatedly, and on one occasion men lay in wait to assassinate him, but he was preserved by the overruling hand of Providence, as he did not return home that night.

In 1862, Mr. Townshend was appointed Archdeacon of Achonry; in 1876, Canon of St. Patrick's National Cathedral; and in 1884, Dean of Achonry, which position he now holds. He represents the diocese of Tuam in the National Cathedral, and is one of the few clergymen in Ireland who can conduct the services of the Church in Irish, and preach in that language.

The Dean often visits England, and he will be remembered by some who heard him at the tercentenary and bicentenary celebrations of the defeat of the Armada and the landing of William Prince of Orange, and also on the platforms of the Protestant Alliance and of the Church Association. On one occasion when speaking for the former society, he quoted the remarkable language of an eloquent countryman of his, the late Rev. M. Hobart Seymour, who raised his warning voice in an endeavour to stir up the English people in defence of their liberties, civil and religious, endangered by the efforts of the Church of Rome. "That church has never abandoned her claim to England, and from the age of the Reformation to the present time she has repeated her efforts to reassert that claim with untiring perseverance—by fierce persecutions in the days of Mary; and by internal rebellion and foreign invasion in the days of Elizabeth; by gunpowder treason in the days of James the First;—and it was in reference to the hatching of this treason that the celebrated lawyer, Coke, said, 'I never knew treason without a Romish priest.' In the time of the second James Rome tried again to regain her ascendency, by the power of the Crown and through the despotic principles of the monarchy. But now she endeavours to promote the same result through the growing strength of the democracy, and she hesitates no longer to own the expectation that England will return to the bosom of the Church of Rome." This state of things is pregnant with the most disastrous consequences to the Protestantism of England, and demands the mightiest efforts that Christians and Protestants can make in defence of the faith. They have a mighty adversary against which they have to contend in the Church of Rome, but they have a still mightier treasure to preserve in true religion among us. We have by the Reformation an open Bible, an English service. We have by the Revolution all the religious liberty that Christians can wish, and all the civil liberty that good subjects can desire.

Again, preaching for the Church Association on one occasion, he denounced the sacerdotal conspirators who want to undo the work of the Reformation, eating the bread of England while doing the work of Rome. The Reformation which they denied was the revolt of human intellect and heart from mental and moral slavery. Christianity had brought such liberty at first. Protestantism was its resurrection after priestcraft had slain it, as it had slain its founder; and in opposition to Ritualism the Dean quoted the late Bishop McIlvaine, who said:—"The whole system of Ritualism is one of Church instead of Christ; priest instead of Gospel; concealment of truth instead of manifestation of truth; ignorant superstition instead of enlightened faith; bondage wherein she had promised liberty; all tending to load us with whatsoever is odious in the worst meaning of priestcraft, in place of the free, affectionate, enlarging, elevating, and cheerful liberty of a child of God."

At home in Ireland the Dean is a warm supporter of all evangelical societies, and no one is better acquainted with Ireland, her wants, and her woes. He gives the right hand of fellowship to all who labour to try and restore to Ireland her lost character, "The Island of Saints and Scholars." He maintains that the cause of all the trouble in that country is not in the English rule, or in the race, or the soil, or the climate; it is the religion. Romanism makes slaves, Protestantism makes men. He highly approves of the work of Rev. Thomas Connellan; being in his native county, he knows his whole history, and how the people are disposed towards him. The Dean and his helpers circulate Mr. Connellan's books, tracts, and periodicals widely, and find that these are most extensively read throughout the county.

When Mr. Moody visited Sligo a few months ago, the Dean and his curate supported him on the platform, in company with ministers of other denominations. We hope often again to see and hear the Dean at our Protestant and Evangelical gatherings in England, and we trust that our readers will not forget at the throne of grace the land which he loves so well. There never was a more hopeful time for evangelistic work than the present; the cleavage which has taken place between a section of the people and the priests, owing to political disputes, will tend to their true emancipation, by leading them to Him who is the Truth, and the knowledge of whom can alone make people free.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

List the ominous stern whisper,
From the Delphic cave within,
"They enslave their children's children Who make compromise with sin."
—J. Russell Lowell.

Do not be too ready with thy rod; an ass cannot be made into a horse by beating.

Mother, have faith in God for your sons and daughters. According to your faith, so will it be unto you.

Parents, be patient. Do not be over anxious as to result. Restrain your childish desire to pull up the plant just to see how the roots are getting on.

Confer with the teachers of your child. There is no experience or advice equal to that of the wise mother's to help in the understanding and fashioning of the child's character.

Movement and life are almost synonymous terms. To expect young children to sit with their hands behind them for any length of time is a direct infringement of nature's laws.

The Sunday School system is educating by its ministries hundreds and thousands of missionaries. The Sunday-school teacher must be an enthusiast, he has such bright, pliant material with which to work.

There are many games and pastimes perfectly harmless in themselves, but in consequence of the evils connected with them they have almost been taken out of Christian hands and handed over to the devil.—John Palmer.

FIRST AID TO STARVING INFANTS.

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S. Ed.

I do not know that there is anything more distressing than those dreadful accounts recently given in the Press of inquests held upon the bodies of young children who died apparently of starvation.

It is agonising to think that perhaps at this moment there are decent women, industrious and respectable, loving their children with all the tenderness of a mother's heart, who yet are, through some vicissitude—such as lack of employment, or recent illness, or sudden death of the bread-winner—wanting food, fuel, clothing, everything, even the barest necessaries to sustain life! One's own food and comforts turn as ashes in one's grasp as we think that in this inclement weather there are other fireless, empty rooms where the tragedy of life is being enacted under such conditions as obtained with poor Mrs. Ind. As a rule these are not the cases where a bold, blatant mendicancy insists on making itself heard, but they rather too often exhibit that apathy or bashfulness which prefers to suffer and die instead of seeking aid from the benevolent at the workhouse door. The thought of such suffering has been long intolerable to me, yet how to relieve it was a problem not easy to solve.

In a very few instances it was obvious that the best course was to admit one or two of the children to the Homes; but in the great majority of cases it was clear that the parental tie should not be broken, but that the swift hand of a wise discriminating charity should be extended to save life, and thereby prevent such tragedies as have lately shocked the public conscience. I venture, therefore, to draw attention to a step which I have recently taken in the humble hope of, to some extent at least, endeavouring to meet so urgent and crying a necessity.

A NEW EFFORT.

I have, with the aid of some friends, established a new branch, which we have called "First Aid to Starving Infants." It is worked in a very simple way. From nine in the morning till two in the afternoon two experienced nurses are kept waiting for any applications that may come in to attend to women with children reported to be in a starving or perilously destitute condition. On getting such a notice a nurse immediately departs on her errand, carrying with her in a bag such items of relief as are likely to be immediately in request. On arrival at the house, if it is found that the case is such as was reported, suitable food is at once wisely admistered to the children, and a meal or two given to the mother; but our aim is always the children, not the adult parent. Fuel is found for a fire and some articles of necessary clothing for the children from our stores. But no money is given under any circumstances.

The visitation is kept up for two days by the nurse. At the end of that time, should the need continue, the case is handed over to another of our workers having a number of devoted women under her charge. Meanwhile, searching inquiries are being made into the history of the woman by our children's beadle with a view to discover some relatives or former employers who may be willing to extend the permanent help which is needed. Sometimes as the result employment may be found for the mother, or sometimes a private friend is raised up who accepts the special charge of a particular family, and thus we are relieved of further responsibility.

THE DRINK ELEMENT.

If, however, in the course of our search it is proved that drink is the cause of the misery, and that food could have been provided by the woman from her earnings for her children if she had not spent it in drink, then the children are only relieved for the one day; but the case is kept under searching supervision, and the woman is warned that if that state of things which we found continues, the law will be strictly enforced against her for the neglect of her children.

Perhaps the fruit of our inquiries may result in an offer to relieve the woman of the burden, say of one or two of her youngest children, so as to set her free to face with a braver and lighter heart, the battle of life for herself and her other children.

My colleagues, on receiving notice, are prepared in this errand of mercy to visit any part of the metropolis where there is urgent need to relieve children. The notice should be addressed to Sister Sara, H.M. Hospital, 19, Stepney Causeway, E., and ought to be marked on the envelope, "First Aid to Infants," so as to ensure prompt attention. The correct name and address of the person to be visited, with the best way of getting to the place, ought always to be clearly stated; and the individual informing us of the fact should give his or her own full name and address as evidence of good faith. Anonymous communications cannot be attended to at any time, nor telegrams, unless from well-known persons.

The expense involved in this work is not large. The cost of travelling from one part of London to the other has, of course, to be borne, and the cost of food and fuel supplied; but it is particularly requested that people who are well able by a little self denial to assist cases of this sort themselves shall not attempt to transfer them to us.

WANTED, HELP AND STORES.

No truer way of strengthening our hands in this most needful service can be imagined than by a few Christian friends giving us their own names and addresses, stating at the same time, that he or she is willing to undertake the supervision and responsibility of a suitable case should we have one to recommend after we have relieved its first wants. I will be thankful to get help for this particular branch, and would especially ask that everything given for this purpose may be marked as sent for "First Aid To Infants."

Among the stores needed I may mention first Brand's Essence of Beef, Valentine's Meat Juice and Anglo-Swiss Milk (the Dairymaid brand) will be thankfully received; so will articles of warm, serviceable clothing, and boots. Everybody can do something to help in this necessary work. If but there is a will, the way will soon be clear.

It is dreadful to think that during the inclement season, already upon us, young children may perish in sight of plenty, and women with broken hearts may be compelled to watch their offspring dying by inches, while we who profess and call ourselves Christians are doing nothing on their behalf. Surely we should delay no longer, but bestir ourselves at once. Perhaps the plan I have formed could be adopted by others in different districts, and so we would be relieved of the necessity of going long distances in reply to urgent requests. Why should not every church throughout the Metropolis have its "First Aid to Infants" branch, with a trained nurse wholly devoted to the work? But, meanwhile, we will do all we can to fill the gap. If Christian friends will entrust us with needful funds both for this and our other urgent work of rescue of homeless and destitute waifs and strays, I promise them that this winter we will leave no case unrelieved which it is possible to succour. That is a large pledge, I know, but in the strength of God it is possible to succeed if only his servants will hold up our hands.

A SONG OF PRAISE.

"When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee."—Isai. xliii. 2.

"They went through the flood on foot; there did we rejoice in Him."—Psalms lxvi. 6.

Leaning on Me amid thy foes,
Strengthened in Me amid the strife!
In a safe path My servant goes,
The shining way that leads to life.

The cruel stones around may fall;
Looking with earnest gaze on high,
Unharmed thou shalt thy way pursue,
Because thy Lord is ever nigh.

'Mid swelling waters with thee still,
The rivers shall not overflow.
And I thine empty cup will fill;
Be of good cheer, and onward go!

Lift up thine eyes, thy help is near,
God will for thee provision make!
Through ages past his word has stood,
His people He will not forsake.

Press forward, then! thy foes shall fall,
And thou the crown of life shalt win!
And when thy course on earth is past,
Unto his home thou'lt enter in.

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

Infirmary Patients.—J. B. King, 1 Ward, General Infirmary, Leeds, asks Scriptural Christmas and New Year cards for distribution among the poor patients.

The Poplar and Bromley Y.P.S.C.E. wish to give to formerly a Christmas dinner to the very poorest children around.—Address, Rev. W. Knight Chaplain, 9, Zetland-street, South Bromley, E.

Christmas Coals.—Will some kind hearts remember the shivering poor in this neighbourhood, and help me to send supplies of coal?—(Miss) Rose Penn, 38, St. Peter's-road, Mile-end, London, E.

Mr. James Sharpless, 14, Sidney-square, London, E., writes:—Many families whom I am visiting are in great straits. Will your readers enable me to assist them. At present I have no means to do so.

Camberwell.—The Children's Mission asks help towards farthing and free breakfasts, soup kitchen, Christmas dinners for poor little ones in distressed families.—A. H. Roe, 251, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E.

Chiswick.—Mr. R. T. Smith, of the Mission Hall, Fraser-street, Chiswick, writes:—We are anxious to make a large number happy this season, and to be prepared to render immediate help to those out of work, should the need arise.

Wandsworth.—The workers at Union Tabernacle seek aid on behalf of the suffering poor in giving free meals to the starving, a Christmas dinner to deserving widows, and otherwise aiding the distressed.—Address, Rev. D. M. Cameron, 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Deptford Poor.—To give poor boys a good hot dinner on Christmas day, and a few free teas in the winter, also to help a few poor Christian families with coals, parcels of meat and grocery, help is asked by Mr. H. A. Punnett, 73, Gosterwood-street, Deptford, S.E.

Fox-court Ragged Schools (Gray's Inn-road).—The committee are seeking to relieve the families of the very poor whose children attend the schools. Much sickness and poverty prevails, and the funds are quite exhausted.—Thos. Fagg, Hon. Sec., 136, Pentonville-road, N.

Ham Yard Soup Kitchen.—The committee solicit funds to supply the poor with food and fire and to provide 1000 families with a good Christmas dinner. There are twenty beds in the hospital, open all the year.—Wm. Stevens, Manager, Great Windmill-street, Piccadilly-circus, W.

Howard-street Mission.—The workers find around them many distressed and unemployed. The soup kitchen has been opened, 250 children have free meals three times a week, and the poor are being aided as means are forthcoming.—Address, Mr. N. A. Soames, New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Pastor Philip Gast, 12, Noel-street, Islington, of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswel-road, states that there is very much distress in St. Luke's and Clerkenwell, and many widows with large families and many in sickness whom he would gladly assist, if, as formerly, he means be furnished for this purpose.

Rev. E. S. Neale, 127, Camberwell New-road, Pastor of Charles-street Baptist Chapel, Camberwell New-road, S.E., asks help in providing for the poor of this district. There are many deserving cases, and the church funds are exhausted. Parcels of left-off clothing and subscriptions will be thankfully received.

Lighthouse Mission.—Having conducted a working man's mission for nine years, we have been the means of rescuing many outcasts and feeding a large number of destitute children. As winter approaches we are asking for help to carry on the work.—R. R. Lewer, Hon. Superintendent, 75, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E.

Rescue of Young Women.—Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, Secretary of the Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., writes:—"At all our nine homes much good has been accomplished. Our work at the latest branch in Kentish Town is cheering, and the efforts of our new out-door worker have been fruitful."

Stockwell Orphanage.—Dr. James Spurgeon writes:—"The usual number of our inmates is once more made up, the staff is in good working order, and our hearts are praising God for his continued presence and blessing. Aid us, therefore, we pray you, to make this coming Christmas-time one of the happiest to these dear children that they have ever known."

Evangelistic Mission.—The director earnestly appeals to all friends of missions to assist in the ordinary and special needs of this mission just now, particularly for the special relief fund and the general current expenses, to clear which to the end of the year the sum of £900 will be required.—C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

Bristol Female Refuge.—Funds are urgently needed. It has for seventy-six years been doing real rescue work. Over 70 per cent. of those who have sought the help of the home have become respectable members of society, and the committee feel that it would be a sad thing should the work of the institution be stopped. Funds may be sent to the secretary, Marlborough House, Marlborough Hill, Bristol.

Aged Christian Blind.—Rev. H. Bright, of the homes at Hanley-road, Crouch-hill, says:—"Twenty of our inmates are between eighty and ninety years of age, forty-six between seventy and eighty, and one is in her ninety-third year. Winter months in every way increase expenses, so many of our aged and afflicted ones require and have day and night nursing. Help us to give them a little extra Christmas cheer."

Peckham.—An interesting work is being carried on at St. Mary's Mission, Senate-street, among the poorer classes, through evangelistic and temperance meetings, Band of Hope and sewing classes. Help is much needed. Free loans or gifts of lantern slides will be of great service: many by this means are gathered to hear the Gospel, and kept out of the public-house.—W. Francis, Superintendent, 49, Evelina-road, Peckham, London, S.E.

Sermon-lane Mission.—The varied agencies of this mission have been carried out to the fullest extent during the past year. £350 is required to meet the exigencies of the work, and it would greatly relieve Mr. Cooksey, the treasurer, were this sum realised. The mission is unsectarian; the appeal of the committee, therefore, is addressed to all Christians, and notably to such as are in touch with the poor and needy classes.—Communications to Mr. J. Dix Lewis, Penrhyn, Hornsey-lane, N.

Tower Hamlets Mission.—The distress now is greater than it has been for years. The heart-rending tales we have to listen to would touch the hearts of those who have abundance and to spare. We intend to brighten Christmas Day by sending into our back streets and alleys a Christmas dinner, so that hundreds will be fed in their own homes who would otherwise go without. Donations may be sent to the treasurer, Mr. Fredk. N. Charrington, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.—Edwin H. Kerwin.

Abbey Street Mission.—The committee make a very earnest appeal for funds to enable them to recommence the distribution of free breakfasts and clothing for destitute children in Bethnal Green. The want and misery amongst the children of the poor is already apparent; hundreds of bread-winners are out of work, and their number will greatly increase as the winter advances. Parcels of left-off wearing apparel, letters for local hospitals, etc., will be very acceptable.—Benjamin Wire, hon. superintendent, 50, King Edward-road, Hackney.

East London Sewing Class Fund.—Last winter the class consisted of about seventy women, most of whom were either widows or the bread-winners of their family. As the distress in the East End of London is already very great, it is earnestly hoped that those who have helped in the past will not allow the women to go without this help during the coming winter months. Every £1 given helps one poor woman by letting her earn 1s. weekly during the most trying months of the winter, and every £15 provides for a class of fifty women for one month.—Subscriptions to Miss Violet Cust, 35, Cadogan-terrace, S.W.

West London Mission.—Mr. Josiah Nix pleads for help in many forms, in kind and in cash, on behalf of the poor among whom the mission labours. He asks some grazier or farmer to send "a nice fat ox, two or three sheep, two or three pigs, alive or dead (that which is least trouble to you), rabbits, hares, geese, ducks, turkeys, fowls, fish, raisins, currants, peel, spice, flour, suet, mincemeat, moist sugar, oranges, grapes, nuts, sweets, potatoes, and onions, Christmas-cards, cakes, tea, lump sugar, toys and dolls, old and new clothes, old and new boots and shoes. Those who cannot send kind, send cash. We will spend it in the best way. One thing more—send some holly and ivy." Address, Wardour Hall, Little Chapel-street, Wardour-street, London.

The Ragged School Union, working among 50,000 poor children in all parts of London, pleads on behalf of the thousands of homes where Christmas means want—not presents; where father is out of work, the children are hungry, and mother at her wits' end to meet their need. The R.S. workers discover the state of things at home by means of the children, and do their utmost to minister relief. Soup kitchens are open, free meals given, the naked clothed and booted. There are also the poor pain-stricken cripples, imprisoned in dreary rooms, for whom are wanted toys, picture-books, cards, and little gifts. Help is earnestly asked by John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

IF YOU DO NOT KNOW the proper answer to your child's question, say so at once, though it may be painful to do so. Better anything than tell your child a falsehood.

AMERICAN NOTES.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

The Children's Aid Society of New York is constantly increasing the sphere of its operations. The next step proposed is the establishment of a farm school near the city. It has over twenty industrial schools under its care. In the forty years of its existence it has sheltered about 300,000 destitute children, 75,000 of whom were placed in permanent homes. The society cares for 550 children of both sexes every night in their several lodging-houses. During the past year 400 boys were started in business, while temporary employment was found for 1000 more. The society is prospering in all its departments.

The State Committee of Y.M.C.A. for Massachusetts and Rhode Island are evangelistically aggressive. They are making earnest effort to reach the 350,000 young men of these States who are as yet outside of the churches. Over 23,000 young men are enrolled members of the Y.M.C.A. who are waking up to a realisation of their great responsibilities. The gentlemen who compose the committee referred to above are among the consecrated men of the country; for a score of years they are foremost in every good work. Who can foretell the possibilities of consecrated business men!

The recent scandals of French-Canadian priests are working havoc among the French Catholic churches. American influences and the public schools are modifying the bigotry of the French people who emigrate to the States, and this change reacts on their people in the provinces. Nor is Chiniquy's seed-sowing in vain.

We are running into some dangers in our modern evangelism. The writer had opportunity in several cities to investigate the work reported done; the real conversions, so far as the pastors could judge, were about a tenth of the statistics reported. At the close of one campaign 1400 converts were advertised. The pastors, after careful search, found in all 170 whom they could recommend for church membership, In another city 700 was the number announced. Not over seventy were found worthy.

Churches are not free from the same tendency of making "a fair show in the flesh" by the multiplication of methods and devices, of auxiliaries and organisations. Our newspapers, secular and religious, like to publish great things, and when pastor or evangelist gets a reputation for sensation, it seems necessary to keep to the front. All honour to our beloved Moody, and others less known, who are willing to follow out apostolic methods, looking to the Spirit of God to produce spiritual results. "The Lord shall count when He writeth up the people."

The first trial of a leading higher critic has resulted against him. Prof. Henry Preserved Smith, of the Presbyterian Seminary, Cincinnati, has been adjudged guilty by his Presbytery. Professor Briggs is on trial at the present writing. The enthusiasm of sympathisers with destructive criticism is on the wane. The great masses of the Christian people are opposed to any mutilation of the blessed Book. Especially is this true throughout the Southern States.

THE FIRST NUMBER of a new periodical, entitled "The D.V.," devoted to the attainment of the direct popular veto of the liquor traffic, will make its appearance in January.

DR. GUTHRIE'S experience was that no fewer than 99 per cent. of the children admitted to his ragged schools were the offspring of parents whose poverty was due to drinking habits.

IF SOCIETY OBJECTS to criminals it must make the temptations less, and close the open, public, and attractive avenues down which our boys are now tobogganning to the lower levels of humanity.—The Dawn (Sydney).

A HOUSE OF REST for workers was opened six years ago in Matlock Bath, and is known as the "Clarence Hydropathic Establishment." The object was to restore health by hydropathic appliances to those in such need. Although the terms are much lower than those usually charged, there are many ministers and evangelists who cannot pay, others can pay part only. I appeal to your readers on behalf of such. Send these run-down brethren to us, and pay their expenses, or send us the means, and we will correspond with them.

Letters to the Editor.

"WHO ARE THE LAITY?"

Sir,—The impartiality which usually fills the editorial chair will, I believe, admit a thoughtful reply to your leading article, "Who are the Laity?" in your issue of Dec. 1.

Although you say not a single answer has been given by any of the clergy to the question in The Record, The Rock, The English Churchman—all professedly Evangelical organs—you have, perhaps, unconsciously answered your question when you quote passages of Scripture involving the word λαος. The laity are the whole people viewed ecclesiastically. Perhaps, too, the silence of the clergy is due to the fact that they are surprised and astounded that such a simple question should be asked when the evidence of so many lexicographers is at hand to show that laity and clergy are relative terms well understanded of the people.

Of course, in its broadest sense, "laity" does include the "clergy" in the same way that the people includes bishops, priests, and deacons, or that the "men" of a regiment include its officers.

But the "clergy" have always been understood to be an order of men taken from the laity for especial functions. To them has been given the ministry of the Word and of the Sacraments.

To confound the two terms laity and clergy, and to say the laity are the clergy, and the clergy the laity, is not to recognise things that differ, and to suppose that two words—even in Holy Scripture—mean one and the same thing.

As a matter of fact, you have not only the words—but the facts existing throughout Christendom (I use the word in its historical sense); you have the laity and the clergy. In other words, men are found, viewed ecclesiastically, as rank and file, teachers and taught.

Since you say that the "love of position and power, of authority and influence, is inherent in human nature, and therefore sacerdotalism and sacramentarianism will be found in the Evangelical section of the Church of England, and amongst the Nonconformist bodies," it would appear that you are contending against a deeply-rooted and widespread instinct of humanity. But this surely is to grant too much.

Whatever may be the Scriptural authority for or arguments against a clerical order—and it would not be difficult to establish Scriptural authority for its existence—it is quite certain that from the existence of an historical Catholic and Apostolic Church the order of the clergy has definitely and uninterruptedly existed. And the clergy have been designated by the term κληρος.

The history of that word as applicable to the Christian ministry, Scriptural in its origin, has passed through three stages.

1. The lot by which the office was assigned.
2. The office thus assigned by lot.
3. The body of persons holding the office.

So the Apostles distributed lots to the brethren, and the lot fell upon Matthias. It would not be wrong to say that Matthias was taken into the lot or clergy of the apostles. It is unreasonable to suppose that our Lord chose his apostles to preach the ministry of reconciliation without providing the means for the continuance of that ministry. So says St. Paul: "He hath committed to us the ministry of reconciliation." The clergy, to whom has fallen the lot of the ministry, are only too willingly the servants of the Church, and only too willingly acknowledge the dispensation committed to them. We do recognise that we have been called to the sacred ministry of God's Word and Sacraments. We have nothing whatever to do with the false cries of "sacerdotalism." If in things pertaining to God we are enabled to present to men the reconciliation effected between God and man and man and man, we are quite content to be called sacerdotalists, so long as men recognise that it is a term of reproach.

Doubtless there is very much of exaggerated authority and love of office. But the true servant of Christ is not to be frightened from the office committed to his charge by the exaggerations of weak and silly men, incapable of understanding the deep needs for which the ministry is established and perpetuated.

We do not gain, but lose, by disregarding the actual truths established in past institutions. There is a great tendency to undervalue the sacred deposit of truth and the ministry which perpetuates it, since men are anxious to place their own views in the place of the carefully-interpreted Word of God as given to his Church. But the faithful acknowledgment of the many truths that have been enunciated and maintained by the Christian ministry or clergy is the last reason for which the clergy should be undervalued.—Yours faithfully,

Henry Overy.

THE LAW OF THE SABBATH.

Sir,—Last week in your just remarks upon the craze of some modern Christians, who insist on Saturday being our true Sabbath-day, you say that "there has been no expressly verbal revision of the Fourth Commandment." But does not a due attention to the wording of that law show that no such revision was needed?

Neither in this commandment, nor in any other place of Scripture, is there any direction to keep the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. It is always the seventh day after six that is commanded, and the observance of Sunday—the First day of the week—as the Christian Sabbath is as exact a verbal and literal obedience to the Fourth Commandment as was the Saturday Sabbath of the Jews.

There is indeed some reason for concluding that the change from the seventh to the first day of the week was a return to the original institution of the sacred day. But be that as it may, a Christian needs no alteration, either verbal or otherwise, in the Sabbath law as it appears in the Decalogue.

Teignmouth. G. A. Jacob, D.D.

Dear Sir,—I see in this week's issue of your paper, a notice of the teaching of the seventh day Advent relative to the propriety of observing the Jewish Sabbath. I should like to ask the opinion of your readers as to the meaning of Ezek. xliii. 26, 27. Do not these verses seem to imply that so far from our going back to the Jewish Sabbath, Israel will (as a nation, when restored to God's favour and reinstated in their land) keep our eighth day, or first of the week?

If the Bible is to be taken literally, it certainly seems to teach that during the millenium their sacrifices will be resumed. Only, instead of looking forward, as of old, to the Christ, they will then look backward; and the Sabbath will be most fittingly observed on the day which commemorates the resurrection.

I am, sir,
Yours faithfully,
Clara A. Tuckett.

INFIDELITY AND HOW TO MEET IT.

Sir,—At the request of the committee of the Christian Evidence Society, we appeal to all Christian people to extend to it a larger liberality than it has yet enjoyed. The Society, founded in 1870, on an undenominational basis, has laboured with ever-increasing success against infidelity in London and the provinces. The moral and spiritual results are from their nature slow in revealing themselves. But of late years testimony to great good effected has accumulated, often from unexpected quarters.

During the present year, the working classes in some cities and towns (stimulated very much by the lectures of Mr. Celestine Edwards) have shown a most remarkable and zealous interest in Christian Evidence, and have formed themselves into local branches for the study and defence of Christian truth. Long and patient labour have prepared the way for this startling evidence of enthusiasm for the faith, not heretofore sufficiently recognised. Yet, in spite of all this need and labour and success, the funds of the Society have fallen below the former minimum income of £1100 a year. This amount is too small if the organisation is to be kept effective and its work adequately performed,

The Christian Evidence Society is essentially a missionary society, and the only one for evidential purposes, inasmuch as it goes out into "the streets and lanes of the city" to seek and to save those who are "without God and without hope," and to arrest and draw back those who are blindly moving on to destruction. It therefore appeals to every man and woman who believes in Christ and loves the mother country to assist it.

A Hint for Christmas.

Dear Sir,—At this season of the year, when family gatherings are being arranged and looked forward to, it may not be out of place to remind your readers of the many in our midst who, from varied circumstances, have neither friends nor home at this time.

There is known to most of us, probably, some clerk, governess, or other friendless one to whom a day or two's rest and enjoyment in a Christian home would bring inestimable gladness. There are also, surely, many Christian homes who could thus, perchance, fill some vacant chair without detracting from the family happiness; while there would be the added joy of having cared for "one of these my brethren."

A Sympathiser.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Sir,—I should like to say that the following up of my work in all the places visited by me weighs at times heavily, much depending on this as to the outcome of any evangelistic effort; but my mind has been set at rest where a Christian Endeavour Society exists, it forming a home immediately for any under deep impressions. Again, the lack of workers has given rise to much anxiety, but where such a Society is found one feels they have around them a Gideon's army, and a praying, therefore a powerful band; for from such I have had rallying young men and women willing to do anything for the furtherance of the mission and the salvation of their friends.

Should these lines be read by any Endeavourers in the districts I am to visit, let them rise to the occasion, knowing that one and all pulling and working together may be used mightily of God. It is with joy that I can say that out of the missions held in the past, some three or four societies have been the outcome. On Sunday, Nov. 6, a hearty invite came from the Endeavourers of Bridgwater, on my arrival, to meet them at 9.30 a.m.; it proved an inspiration to the mission, for being blessed, one was made a blessing.

SERMON LANE MISSION.

This mission, labouring in a district thickly inhabited by the industrial poor, many of whom are now out of employment and struggling with serious difficulties, has long been valued by reason of its energetic and useful service. For forty years its operations have been carried on under varying circumstances, and for a long time under the conduct of the late devoted Mr. Fuller, succeeded by his staunch friend and supporter, Mr. W. D. Lewis, since also deceased. The day schools have, owing to the Education Act, disappeared, but in their place have grown up a whole network of Christian and benevolent agencies.

The Sunday afternoon and evening schools are largely attended, the Bands of Hope, Penny Banks and other operations among the young go on vigorously and successfully, influencing, as evidence appears, many of the surrounding homes into which the Gospel and lessons of temperance and thrift are carried by the little ones amongst the adults, and a good work is done by means of the mothers' meeting, the Young Women's Welcome (for working girls), total abstinence, and other agencies.

The Gospel services have lately been very encouraging. Mr. W. Harry Dawe, of Exeter, for example, recently held a special series in which much interest has been awakened, good audiences attracted, and it is believed not a little blessing granted. The Youths' Institute, which holds its meetings at Denmark-terrace Schools, still carries on its operations, meeting the needs of a large number of working youths residing in the neighbourhood.

The whole of these agencies are now in full activity, while in addition, at the present season special efforts are being made to aid the unemployed poor and to provide a little seasonable cheer. The secretary is Mr. D. Cooksey, 52, Amwell-street, E.C.

A Bible Reading Outline.

THE CHOICE OF MOSES.
Heb. xi. 25.

It is a blessed privilege to have an early godly training, but a personal choice must be made.

I. What this choice was. "To suffer with the people of God. This implies:—
1. That God has a people. Ex. vi. 4; 1 Pet. ii. 10.
2. That they are a suffering people. "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Matt. v. 11; Phl. iii. 10.

II. What constrained Moses to make this choice. "Faith."
1. By faith he saw the nature of godless pleasure. "Pleasures of sin." Dan. v.; Rev. iii. 17—20.
2. By faith he saw the riches of Christ. "Esteeming reproach for Christ greater riches, etc." 1 Pet. iv. 14.
3. By faith he saw the rewards of eternity. "He had respect unto the recompense of the reward," v. 26. "In the world to come eternal life." Mark x. 30.

III. What this choice implied:—
1. A refusing, 24. Phil. iii. 7.
2. A forsaking, 27. 2 Cor. vi. 17.

IV. How he was sustained in his choice. "He endured, as seeing Him who is invisible," 27.
Seeing Him gives—
1. Patience in trial, v. 27.
2. Strength for the battle. Josh. v. 14.
3. Comfort in affliction, Ps. xxiii. 4.
4. Support in death. Acts vii

FROM MR. HENRY VARLEY.

BEFORE this letter reaches you I trust the winter's work in India will have commenced. We have just arrived by the s.s. Carthage from Melbourne, where my arrival and brief stay were most timely in regard to the great loss sustained in the removal of our deeply loved daughter. Through Divine grace beautiful in character and life, the sweet influence of her brief earthly experience is and has been felt on every side.

My son Herbert is with me. In a few days we hope to be either in Bombay, Madras, or Calcutta. I shall be guided by the movements of the mail steamers. We do not desire to stay in Ceylon at this time, but hasten onward to India. We are anticipating much fruit for our Lord, and I shall be very grateful if the reading of this letter leads many of the fellow workers in England and elsewhere to remember us in constant and fervent prayer.

My soul longs that many of these should be filled with the knowledge of our Lord's will, and become with us fellow heirs of the grace of life. Oh, for some sheaves of Indian corn to bring with rejoicing to the Holy Father's garner! I long to be divinely equipped for this ministry. To be "a sweet savour of Christ unto God," among the Hindoos and Brahmins, thousands of whom understand English, how blessed! For this service who is sufficient? But our sufficiency is of God—true ground of confidence.

We were indeed thankful for the loving commendation of many brethren in Christ gathered in Melbourne for special prayer the day we left the city. We have had a calm and pleasant passage. What a joy is set before us! To hear many of the swarthy sons of India joining in the saving testimony—"In whom" we also "have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."

HENRY VARLEY.

Gathered Gold.

A DAY will come when those who are not born again, will wish that they had never been born at all.—Rule.

ARISE!

Rise, for the day is passing,
And you lie dreaming on;
The others have buckled their armour,
And forth to the fight are gone.
A place in the ranks awaits you;
Each man has some part to play:
The Past and the Future are looking
In the face of the stern To-day.

JOHN XX. 19.

There are four things in this text:—(1) The world was shut out. (2) The disciples were shut in. (3) Then came Jesus. (4) The result was peace.

THE SONG OF HEAVEN.

The song
Of heaven is ever new; for daily, thus,
And nightly, new discoveries are made
Of God's unbounded wisdom, power, and love,—
Which gives the understanding larger room,
And swells the hymn with ever-growing praise.
Pollock.

PHARISAIC PRIDE.

The pharisee in this parable "believed rightly, but was not a right believer." Pride was his snare. And what has not pride to answer for? It cost Nebuchadnezzar his reason, and Hezekiah his kingdom. Through pride, angels lost heaven; and pride included the Pharisee in the society of the unjustified.

GO FORWARD!

Go onward, ever upward,
Be my motto, day by day;
Baffled oft, oppressed, and burdened,
Sorely tempted by the way,—
Nearer God each night I stay,
Nearer than at break of day.
—Rev. John Brownlie.

THE SCRIPTURES OPENED.

St. Luke describes a twofold work done by Christ in explaining the Scriptures to the two disciples in the walk to Emmaus. He opened the Scriptures, we read. Here was one work. And He opened their understandings to understand the Scriptures. There was another work. He did this, and He is always doing it.—Bishop Wordsworth.

SOUL WINNING.

IF my testimony to the dear Lord's blessing on my humble efforts in winning souls to Him should encourage others to "go and do likewise," to His great name be all the praise. Fifty years ago, I began Sunday-school teaching and tract distribution, when a girl of fifteen. But not till ten years after, when I gave myself to the Lord, did I see any fruit of my labour. There could not be, for I worked in my own strength, but from that time fruit appeared.

One Sunday afternoon after dismissing my large class, held in my own parlour, a boy of ten years returned enquiring anxiously, "Teacher, what must I, such a great sinner, do to be saved?" I pointed him to the Lamb of God, and the Holy Spirit carried the joyful news home. He soon accepted Christ, and is now working nobly for Him.

One day I heard malignant scarlet fever had entered the home of three of my scholars. I hurried off, but too late; a youth of seventeen having just died. I said to his sister, who was weeping bitterly, not feeling sure of her brother's eternal safety, "and what if this awful fever should strike you down next?" "Oh," she said, her face beaming with heaven's joy, "I have no fear for myself, sometimes I feel Jesus so near me that I almost feel as though I could touch Him, and He keeps me in perfect peace." Three days after she too fell a victim, but died safe and happy in the arms of Jesus, through the teaching in the Sunday-school. The third girl was spared, and she and her husband are Christians.

Another girl about the same time left the class to go to service at a distance. She was very reserved, and though I spoke seriously to her often I could not see the least impression made. But the Holy Spirit was even then working. Four years ago a telegram came. Would I go to see her at once. I went off in haste by rail, twenty miles, to find her dead. Recently married, but attacked by consumption, she could yet triumph in Christ, and sang her old Sunday-school hymns to the last, leaving a precious message for me as the means of her conversion.

I might go on with many deeply-interesting cases from that class, but already I fear to trespass on your space. One day, feeling downhearted at seeing little fruit from tract distribution, I met with a respectable working Christian man. I asked him to tell me of his conversion. "Oh, ma'am," he said, "it was through a tract you left at my house two years ago, entitled, 'It's all in believing.'" Of my own family I claimed the promise, and was not disappointed. One has gone triumphantly home to glory; the others are all on the Lord's side and working for Him.—Yours very truly, A. A.

Having worked in the Gospel for about thirty years it may be well to give my experience in winning souls to Christ, in response to your invitation.

Firstly.—The most important thing of all is to preach the Gospel, not contenting oneself with the fringe of the subject, but dealing with the central truth of all, the Atonement—that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, and that He was buried, and that He rose again from the dead, according to the Scriptures. See that this is grasped or understood, illustrating it in whatever way may be found most suitable, but be sure to "make the message clear and plain, Christ receiveth sinful men."

Secondly.—Press upon your hearers, whether an individual or a congregation, the immediate acceptance of the truth as regards themselves, and ask them for a present decision.

Should it be urged there may be many not in a fit state to receive Christ, we reply, It is part of his work to "give repentance," and it has been seen many times that if one previously indifferent to Christ will yield his will, signs of contrition very soon appear.

It is very desirable to mark the surrender by a definite act that may be looked upon in days to come. Although not free from objection, the penitent form is an excellent institution. An after meeting, if wisely conducted, will furnish this opportunity in a number of ways.

When souls are brought to Christ, do not lose sight of them. Our plan is to keep a mental register, not of names, but simply a definite number in the memory, which can be added to from time to time. One can thus at the throne of Grace, when in touch with God, keep in touch with those brought to Him perhaps years ago as well as with the last person whom we have reason to believe has been brought to Christ.

Experience seems to prove that public address is less effective than private appeal, and that preaching should, whenever practicable, be followed by personal conversation. FREDK. GELLER.

MOTHER, let it be for your child, as it was with the universe—"In the beginning, God."

IS MALTA UNDER ENGLISH RULE?

THE soul of Mr. George Holmes, English travelling secretary of the Y.M.C.A. for Egypt and Palestine, has been greatly exercised by the condition of Malta, which he revisited en route to Cairo. He says the island is a most ungodly place, although there are thousands of priests, monks, and friars. Sunday operas, circuses, and concerts are of every week's occurrence. There is everything to lead a young fellow astray.

The Christian workers here are bound hand and foot. If one is caught giving away a tract he would most likely be sent off the island; certainly he would be brought to prison. Two ladies from a Peninsular and Oriental steamer gave some little books away a short time ago. They were followed by the police, arrested, sent back to their vessel, their books confiscated, and the P. and O. agent was obliged to become bail for them before they could be liberated.

A short time since a service was being held on Sunday morning for the troops on the barrack ground because some natives heard and listened to the singing, a request was made to the governor that the service should be discontinued! Now, both police and priests are on duty every Sunday to drive away any natives who come near.

During the Sunday service, at the English Church, fireworks and bombs are often let off close by, at a Catholic Shrine. For this there is no redress. There is more liberty in Spain or Austria for Christian work than in Malta, which is an English possession. Romish persecution is intense. All the Government officials are Romanists, and the Governor seems to be powerless. By the canon law, "any Maltese who retains any tract or Gospel for three days is excommunicated. All such must be at once delivered to the priests."

The marriage laws in Malta are scandalous. A few days since an English officer was married to a Maltese lady. Being a Protestant he was required to pay the sum of £60 before the ceremony could be performed. After all he embraced the Romish faith, and was married as a Catholic. Several priests attended the wedding, manifesting high glee. The distressed father of the officer is an English clergyman.

Englishmen need to know about these matters before the new wretched marriage laws come into force. Although Malta is an English possession, it is governed by Maltese law. All proceedings in the courts of justice and in the council meetings are conducted in Italian! not even in Maltese! The Pope rules, and there is no denying the fact that the Roman Catholic authorities are seeking to make all marriages illegal, unless both parties are Catholic.

The explanation given is that England holds Malta according to a treaty which stipulates that no interference shall be made either with the Maltese law or religion. "England is there not by conquest, but by invitation."—Association News.

Christian Endeavour.

TWENTY-NINE new C.E. societies were registered in the British section during the month of November.

The Marlborough Y.P.S.C.E. recently held a meeting, when, after having had tea together, nearly every member brought an article of clothing as a gift to Dr. Barnardo's Homes. The members of the International Bible Reading Association Branch also joined in this good service, and, as a result, a parcel of ninety articles was packed during the evening.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE is now happily enjoying a good measure of health. He has lately been addressing meetings at Hastings, Portsmouth, Reigate, Reading, Barnet, Bridport, and other places. There have been large gatherings and encouraging results. His many friends at home and abroad will rejoice in his restoration to strength and active service.

MR. GEORGE LING, the well-known temperance worker in London, died on Monday last, and will be interred on Saturday. He originated the Central Temperance Association, one of the oldest organisations in London, which still carries on a good work among the masses at Livesey Hall, Bishopsgate.

WINCHESTER.—In our last issue, a correspondent stated:—"We have just had a mission in the churches in this city. Rev. A. B. Sole, rector of St. Thomas's Church, had a procession through the streets one evening headed by a large cross, and they were carrying lamps and chanting the Litany. The missioner at his church said 'he hoped that before he comes there again they will have established the confessional there regularly every Thursday.'" On this Mr. Sole writes to us:—"The statement is absolutely untrue with regard to the statement concerning the confessional." We have not time before going to press to communicate with our correspondent.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

OXFORD.

The Principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) preached last week in St. Peter-le-Bailey Church from Matt. xxv. 32 and 33—"And before Him shall be gathered all nations." The preacher spoke of the four great dividing elements in this life, space, misunderstanding, sin, and death. But the separation referred to in the text would be unerring, final, and infinite, filling some with unspeakable anguish and others with everlasting joy.

It is a pleasure to learn that Wycliffe Hall has again been full this term, testifying as it does to the popularity and power of the Principal.

"Father Ignatius" lectured last week on "Biblical Criticism," with special reference to some prominent Oxford scholars, who were mentioned by name and their teaching denounced. Apart from certain personalities and a manner not calculated to attract, there was faithful testimony to the integrity of God's Word. But the "Father's" well-known Romish tendencies in doctrine largely discount his championship of the Bible.

The Great Western Railway Temperance Union is doing good work among the employés here, and held a most successful annual meeting last week. The branch has the invaluable aid of the station-master as président.

Another most useful agency is the British Women's Temperance Association, which by means of meetings and personal action is doing real service among poor women in Oxford and the district.

CAMBRIDGE,

An able and powerful address by Rev. Martin Hall at the Alexandra Hall on the evening of Sunday week concluded the services of the Inter-collegiate Christian Union for the term. A thanksgiving meeting for blessing received at these services during the term was held on Wednesday afternoon at the Henry Martyn Hall. There has been much definite prayer for these services of late, and God has answered abundantly. We are looking forward to a visit of Rev. G. Grubb next term to hold a mission.

The closing meeting of the C.M.U. on Monday night last week at the Henry Martyn Hall was given to intercessory prayer for foreign missions. The farewell meetings to Messrs. Roscoe, Ernest Millar, and R. H. Leakey, of Corpus, being so fresh in the minds of many, caused it to be a matter of special interest.

The new vicar of St. Barnabas, Rev. T. W. Thomas, was instituted to the living on Friday by the Bishop of Ely. The parish being a large and populous one, Mr. Thomas will find ample scope for his energies.

The funeral of the late Dr. Hort took place on Tuesday week. The service was held in the chapel of Emmanuel College (of which the deceased was a Fellow), and the interment at Mill-road Cemetery. A very large number of masters of colleges and professors came to pay their last tribute of esteem.

The Seamen's Mission and the C.M.S. have lost a good friend in the death of Mr. William Fulford, of Park Side. He took an active interest in parochial matters at Christ Church, where he was a churchwarden. Rev. H. W. Fulford, of Clare, is one of his sons.

CHICAGO NOTES.

The baser element is moving the masses to petition Congress to open the World's Fair on Sundays. We hope Congress will not recede from its action, but we know not what a day may bring forth.

At the last meeting of the Pastors' Alliance "Lawlessness in Chicago" was the theme. Mr. H. J. Heywood, representing the Citizens' League for the Suppression of Vice, reported that the League had prosecuted nearly two thousand saloon-keepers for selling liquors to minors and habitual drunkards. Chicago has 7000 open saloons.

Another great movement is that which seeks to bring to justice all who publish impure literature. It is a criminal offence to use the mails for distributing vile literature; yet this is done constantly.

Bishop Samuel Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has started a new and popular movement, called "The People Institute," to give educational, literary, musical, and religious instruction to the masses on the West Side. He has rented a large building, where over three thousand persons can assemble. Though this may be considered preparatory, yet it is leading to the higher and holier work of Gospel ministration.

B. F. Jacobs is pushing on in raising funds for a model Sunday-school room for the World's Fair. It will be built doubtless in the spring, and be all that genius and art can contrive in this line. F.

IRISH NOTES.

New premises are being erected by the Ballymena Y.M.C.A., at a cost of £2,000.

Mr. Herbert Hurditch has been evangelizing for some time with many tokens of success in the North of Ireland.

A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour has been commenced at Sandymount Methodist church, Dublin, under hopeful auspices.

A meeting of the converts at the recent Dublin mission has been held, and was largely attended. The churches in the city are following up the work.

Mr. Samuel Glasgow, of the Irish Temperance League, has held a Gospel Temperance Mission in Enniskillen, and several new members were enrolled.

The Belfast Town Mission, which is doing an excellent work, reports that it finds strong drink and the multiplication of spirit groceries the greatest hindrance to its success.

Evangelistic services have been held during the past week in Clones, by Mr. B. Jackson; in Raffery Presbyterian church, by Revs. W. J. Jackson, Henry Montgomery, and others.

Interesting Presbyterian Conferences were held last week in Downpatrick and Antrim, when the best method of carrying on evangelistic and Sunday-school work and missions was discussed.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has concentrated his efforts during the past week in Ashmore-street Mission Hall (connected with Rev. H. Montgomery's church). He has been enabled to reach many working-men, women, and girls connected with the workshops, mills, and factories in this part of the city.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The late Mr. Thos. Nelson has left £10,000 to the Free Church.

Dr. F. L. Robertson, of St. Andrew's Established Church, Glasgow, died on Saturday evening.

On New Year's Day contributions are to be made in the Free Churches for the jubilee debt extinction fund.

The Dundee School Board are being urged to introduce temperance teaching into the educational programme.

The "Amateur Vagrant" has opened in the columns of the Glasgow Daily Mail a "Little Barefect" fund.

The Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children has recently dealt with some bad cases of cruelty and neglect by parents.

The Dundee magistrates have again recommended all licence holders to close public-houses on the day when the New Year will be celebrated.

Dr. Mackinnon, of the Medical Mission, Damascus, spoke in Edinburgh on Sunday evening on the needs of Syria, and appealed for an extension of his work.

A lady contributor in The Dundee Advertiser gives a vivid account of life in that city as seen "under the street lamps." Another contributor is investigating the Dundee slums.

The Glasgow Medical Missionary Society had its annual meeting last week. It has a training home for ladies, and renders help to outside students, as well as doing much good work among the sick poor at home.

Rev. John McNeill conducted Gospel services in Berwickshire last week. On Sabbath he commenced his mission in Edinburgh. In the morning he preached to a large assembly in the Free Assembly Hall, and in the evening to a crowd in the Corn Exchange.

Tight Lacing.

A crusade against this modern madness is begun in last week's Gentlewoman. The writer says:—"Those women who have not been guilty of the folly and iniquity of tight-lacing, or, being free from it personally, have given no thought to the subject, will stand aghast at the widespread wickedness that is practised by girls and women who are addicted to this pernicious habit. By the time our readers have read, in the articles I am about to publish, of the inhuman doings, even of parents and guardians, and the self-inflicted crimes, born of ignorance and folly, of which growing girls are guilty, they will be ready to side with us, and by every influence they possess help our crusade against this species of modern madness."

THE LOCAL AUTHORITIES at St. Petersburg have under consideration a proposal for the establishment of a sanatorium for inebriates in that city. The Odessa Society for the Suppression of Drunkenness is also engaged in the preparation of a similar scheme.—British Medical Journal.

Temperance Notes.

The British Temperance League's New Year's Tract, "Britain's Upas Tree," by the Rev. Chas. Garrett, is a forcible statement of facts, and should be read by everybody.

The annual demonstration of the Newcastle, Gateshead, and District Band of Hope Union took place the other night in the Newcastle Town Hall, which was crowded with people.

The World's Women's Christian Temperance Union will hold its convention in Chicago next year, on June 8 and 9, when the meetings will be addressed by prominent speakers from all countries.

England has long been ripe for Sunday closing. The majority in favour of the measure is seven to one, and where the vote has been confined to the working classes the majority is ten to one.

The Watch Committee of the Manchester Corporation have granted a dramatic licence for the Palace of Varieties, on the understanding that the management would not apply for an Excise licence.

The United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union was formed in 1881, and now embraces the whole of the railways except the Great Western, whose men have a very large Union of their own, and are doing a good work among the employés.

The Central Association for stopping the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday has recently held large and influential meetings at Horsham, North Walsham, and Cromer, when resolutions in support of Sunday closing were unanimously carried.

Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, is to be welcomed at a great united temperance demonstration, at Exeter Hall, on Monday, January 9, when Lady Henry Somerset will preside. Our readers should make a note of the date and keep a look-out for later particulars.

The Kidderminster Workhouse has been long notorious for an excessive expenditure upon intoxicants, reaching the highest sum for beer of all workhouses outside the metropolitan area. The Local Government auditor having taken action, the committee have resolved that the brewing of beer in the workhouse should be discontinued.

Rev. E. Gedge states that the drink traffic has been doing so much injury in the Kaffir Churches that a rule has been made that no man or woman should become a local preacher or class-leader unless he or she was a total abstainer. At the present time there are between 40,000 and 50,000 total abstainers among the members of the churches.

At the world's W.C.T.U.'s headquarters in America, names are being received, affixed to the petition headings, from all parts of the world, with many eloquent and pathetic comments, such as "Homeless from Drink," "Crush the Demon," "Mother of Six Prohibition Voters," and often the sacred aspiration is added to the woman's signature, "God grant this prayer."

The Chiltern Hills Temperance Federation, which includes about thirty temperance societies, under the presidency of Lady Battersea, recently held a very successful conference and public meeting at Aston-Clinton. Lady Battersea presided and spoke at both meetings, and Miss Fisher, LL.A., gave an able address on the scientific aspect of the temperance question.

"A Worker" writes to the Lancaster Guardian to commend to the Lancaster borough and county magistrates a resolution passed by the Wigan County bench, which runs thus; "To instruct the police to ascertain the last place at which drink had been supplied in all cases of apprehension for drunkenness." This idea must seem to many exceedingly sound and sensible.

At the annual meeting of the Liverpool Wesleyan Band of Hope Union, a report was read which showed that there are 71 affiliated societies with a membership of 12,520. In connection with the "Million More" scheme 20,000 circulars have been distributed. There are 4,040 scholars and teachers in schools receiving scientific lectures, and 270 have taken certificates and prizes for the lectures.

Mr. John Hutton, L.C.C., speaking the other day in Prince's Hall, said that he took a strong line upon the temperance question, because his heart was with the workers of this great city. He would think he was betraying the trust reposed in him if he did not. He rejoiced in the County Council because they were able to do good work for temperance. They could refuse licences when occasion demanded and close public-houses in such cases as the rehousing at Bethnal Green. What was the good of talking to people about chastity and reverence for women when they lived in pigstyes, surrounded by a dozen gin-shops? Away with the ginshops. The Council had removed alcoholic liquors from the dietary at the asylums under their control. A weak link in the chain of temperance reform was the water supply of London. The Council hoped to improve that.

Obituary.

MRS. S. L. GINSBURG.

Pastor S. L. Ginsburg, writing from Bahia (Rua Collegio, N. 32), mourns the death of his beloved wife. He says: "She came out to me in May, on the 28th of which month we were married. She entered into the work at once, and with her whole soul. Being a certificated nurse, she visited the sick and the poor of the city, and by her kind and sympathetic face attracted a good many to our preaching hall. We were just planning to found a hospital for the Evangelical poor of this great city, when yellow fever took her off, on Nov. 12. A little while before she expired, she said, 'I am in good hands; I am going home.' Her last prayer was for more labourers in this great but dark land of Brazil."

MR. C. W. SMITH.

Many are mourning the death of Mr. Christopher William Smith, who, since his marriage with Miss Edith Reade, has, conjointly with her, carried on the work which was commenced nineteen years ago at Packgang, Isle of Wight, by members of Mr. C. W. Reade's family. Mr. Smith was for many years at the head of the financial department of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams, and Co., St. Paul's Churchyard, and had the honour, in conjunction with Mr. George Williams, of being one of the originators of the Young Men's Christian Association. He suggested the simple and appropriate title of the organisation, and was the first honorary secretary. He was a careful Bible student, and in addition to writing several tracts, was the author of "Hints on the Study of Holy Scripture" and "Bible-class Notes" on a portion of the Gospel of St. Luke.

MR. W. H. GROSER.

Friends of Sunday-schools will mourn sincerely the death of Mr. Groser, so long and so closely identified with the Sunday School Union. He was, we understand, for nearly fifty years a member of the committee of that body; for seventeen years he edited the book for children, The Child's Own Magazine; and for more than thirty-eight years he was one of the honorary secretaries. His only son succeeded to the work which he then had to relinquish. Three years ago, however, Mr. Groser again accepted work as the literary secretary of the Union, and his son became book editor. Father and son were the leaders of the church in Arundel-square, and both were much respected and loved by those who knew their work and worth. Mr. Groser was more than ninety years of age, and was followed to his grave at Abney Park on Thursday last by a large crowd.

MISS MARY ALLEN WEST.

A cablegram from Japan announced the death, on December 1, of Miss Mary Allen West, editor of the Vision Signal, the official organ of the World's and National Women's Christian Temperance Unions. Miss West started for Japan in September last by appointment of the World's W.C.T.U., and was to introduce a more thorough knowledge of White Ribbon methods in that country and in China. Her strong intellect, great-hearted sympathies, and gift of leadership rendered her services invaluable to the largest society of women in the world, and her Temperance work was of the most thorough kind. She was president of the Illinois Women's Dress Association, was for years superintendent of public instruction in Knox county, Illinois, and for thirty years a prominent figure in educational circles in that State. Miss West's death leaves Miss Willard the senior member of the associated corps of editors, from which death removed Miss Julia Ames early in last year.

MR. W. BROCKELMANN, HEIDELBERG.

News has just reached me of the departure to the home above of Mr. W. Bröckelmann, in Heidelberg. He was the champion of Sunday-schools in Germany, and for many years the active and persevering supporter of this movement, after having joined Mr. Boodruff, of America, in calling the attention of the German churches to the need of Sunday-schools. With very singular tenacity Mr. Bröckelmann sustained the group system of Sunday-schools, and he carried the victory over many and hard prejudices. The last years of his life were years of more or less suffering, and his end was perfect peace, resting in the finished work of Christ. F. W. Baedeker.

Cassel, Dec. 6.

Mr. E. Worsdell, B.A., of Banbury, writes to us: "Bröckelmann was co-worker with Pastor Prochnow, of Berlin, and was instrumental in establishing between 1863 to 1875, when I had the great privilege of his friendship, some 1,400 Sunday-schools, a movement practically new to Germany. How many more he was able to start I do not know, as of late years he became very infirm. He has passed away in the 77th year of his age. I never knew so cheery and warm-hearted, tolerant, patient, devoted a worker in the very centre of negative beliefs—a man whose memory is a blessing."

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting special mission services at St. Austell, Falmouth, and Liskeard, Cornwall.

Redditch.—At the Baptist Chapel here a week's mission was recently concluded by Rev. C. Duxbury, of Tamworth. The attendances and interest were well sustained, and the results encouraging.

Mr. W. Sampson has just concluded a twelve days' mission at Williton, Watchet. The town was well visited, many were attracted, the Word was faithfully preached, and the results appear to have been most cheering.

Rhondda.—Special services, arising out of blessing granted at a prayer meeting, have been held here partly by a Joyful News evangelist, but chiefly by local friends. Much blessing has been granted, particularly among the young people.

Ecclefechan, N.B.—Rev. J. Jeffray, continuing his work among the churches, concluded on Thursday a fortnight's mission in Ecclefechan Free Church. A deeply impressive spirit pervaded the meetings and large numbers gathered nightly, many of them coming long distances through frost and snow.

Penge.—Revs. F. B. Meyer and F. C. Spurr have concluded a ten days' mission at Penge Tabernacle. The services have been bright, and the stirring addresses of those popular evangelists will no doubt be productive of much good. The evangelists were ably assisted in the services by Rev. J. Wesley Bond, pastor.

Mr. Edward Wright has finished a week's work at Newcastle-on-Tyne with many tokens of blessing. On Saturday, December 3, he began by addressing a meeting of workers in the Y.M.C.A. Hall; on Sunday morning he spoke at a free breakfast to men in the Friar's Mission, and in the evening preached the Gospel to over 2,000 in the Circus. From Monday to Friday he conducted services in the Friar's Mission.—J. M.

Richard Weaver concluded a fourteen days' mission at the Ebury Mission, Pimlico, on December 9. It has been a most blessed time throughout. God's honoured servant has preached the Gospel each night with much power, and at every meeting souls were saved. On the last night the hall was packed. Mr. Weaver's clear and fearless testimony has moved very many. As a mission we devoutly praise God for sending such a man amongst us.—W. M.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has held an eight days' mission at Ware under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour at High-street Chapel. Several were moved to decision for Christ. After a largely-attended meeting of men, and an impressive speech from Mr. Hallowes, a secretary and committee were appointed to carry on a mission of social purity. Six separate meetings for children and two for women were held during the week.

Evercreech, Somersetshire.—A mission has been held in this village by Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Morgan. Services were held for men, for women, for children, as well as the general services. The women's meetings were very large when Mrs. Morgan gave addresses. It is believed that very much blessing has been the result.

Birmingham.—At the Monument-road Mission a special mission has just concluded under the leadership of Rev. T. E. Westerdale, who has stirred the Christian workers into enthusiastic service. The Gospel has been preached by Revs. G. A. Bennetts, J. H. Hopkins, and others. Large numbers profess to have been awakened to a sense of their danger and compelled to flee to Christ. The systematic visiting of the whole district twice over was the means of bringing many of the utterly careless to listen to the Gospel.

Johnstone, N.B.—A successful series of united and evangelistic services has been conducted during the past three weeks in the Free Church by Mr. J. W. Moodie. Each night large numbers of seekers remained to be spoken to, and it was interesting to see the different ministers of the town, with a large staff of living workers, freely moving among the people and speaking to them about salvation. Bible-readings were held during the second week in the afternoon in the West U.P. Hall, and were largely attended.

Rev. F. C. Spurr will hold Missions at Worthing, Jan. 1 to 3; Ilford, Jan. 8 to 15; Reading, Jan. 22 to 29.

THE FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION of the Durham and Northumberland Union of the British Women's Temperance Association was held at Sunderland on Tuesday and Wednesday last week. The meeting for women was presided over by Lady Henry Somerset, and addresses were given by Miss Willard, Miss Lucy Guinness, and others

Personalia.

Rev. Adam Scott, whose valuable work at Sale and as secretary of the Cheshire Union is well known, has accepted a call to Southport.

Rev. Robert Railton is leaving Hastings after Christmas to commence work at Blackburn. His labours at Hastings have been greatly blessed.

Rev. William Arthur, the beloved and honoured author of The Tongue of Fire, is about to leave for the Riviera, intending there to make his home.

Dr. Campbell, the blind Principal of the Royal Normal College, has returned from a trip across the Atlantic. He had been suffering from insomnia, brought on by overwork.

Mr. James Faustone has recently returned from Brazil, after thirteen years of faithful labour at Pernambuco and elsewhere. He would much value opportunities of presenting the needs of South America wherever the way might open.—Address, Harley House, Bow, E.

Rev. W. E. Hurndall, as stated last week, has been strongly urged to retain the nominal pastorate of Harley-street Chapel, Bow, while taking a lengthened rest. He has, however, felt compelled to adhere to his decision, and the church has most regretfully accepted his resignation.

Rev. J. T. Wigner, one of the oldest Baptist ministers, having announced his intention of resigning the pastorate of Brockley-road Baptist Chapel at the close of this year, his co-pastor, Rev. John Lewis, has been invited by the church to take the sole pastorate, which he has accepted.

Mr. John Knox Bokwe, the young Kaffir Christian, now returning home after a visit to this land, is the son of the first convert at Lovedale. He is a valued worker, holding an important position under Dr. Stewart. His address the other evening to the Young Men's Missionary Society, at Highbury, was much enjoyed.

The Bishop of Wakefield has been obliged to cancel all engagements in consequence of an injury he sustained while on a visit to Edinburgh a fortnight ago. Last week he appeared to be recovering, but on Monday he had a relapse, and on Tuesday he suffered great pain. On Thursday his medical adviser found a change for the better in his condition.

Mr. Edward Whitwell.—All friends of Sunday Closing will receive with deep regret the intimation of the retirement of Mr. Edward Whitwell from the office of honorary secretary of the Central Association, owing to advancing years and failing strength. For a quarter of a century he has filled this office with great devotion to the cause. Mr. Whitwell has accepted the office of vice-president of the association, and remains a member of the executive.

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

The Society recently made a grant of Scriptures to the Baptist Mission on the Congo, and received hearty thanks for it,

A letter received from Morocco gives an interesting account of Bible-work along the scarred and burnt tracks of the recent fighting.

The New Testament and the Psalms have been translated into the Popo or Dahomey language; Wesleyan missionaries have been at work at Porto Novo for thirty years.

Two of the Gospels are now to be had in the Kimbundu tongue, spoken by the natives of Loanda, south of the Congo. Mr. Heli Chatelain reports a considerable circulation of these Scriptures.

In one place in Brittany from which a colporteur was driven with stones two years ago, he was lately received with open arms, and a piece of ground has been given for a place of Reformed worship.

The committee have recently had a very interesting letter, asking for a grant of English Testaments, from Mangaia, south-east of Rarotonga, one of the Hervey Islands. The Society publishes the entire Bible in Rarotonga, the language of the Hervey group.

A Cape Town colporteur writes:—"I have been engaged in colportage work for the Bible Society for four months; during that time I have sold about 800 Bibles and Testaments for the sum of £80. I have generally received a hearty welcome in going from house to house. The natives, on going into their kraals, flock round you like a lot of bees, and will go as far as spending their last sixpence in purchasing a Bible."

The Book World.

T. NELSON AND SONS.

The Forlorn Hope, by A. L. O. E. This gifted pen which has done such noble service in the past now tells in the form of a charming tale the story of the anti-slavery struggle in the States, and the heroic endurance of Lloyd Garrison and a band of men and women like-minded, who led what at the time seemed "a forlorn hope" against the forces of slavery.

Lost in the Wilds of Canada, by E. Stredder. A tale of backwoods life, with Indians, lawless men, steady settlers, and, as the title shows, a lost boy, who is, of course, finally found. There are many interesting passages, but the whole seems a little improbable.

Cyril's Promise, by W. J. Lacey. A readable temperance tale, showing the misery of drink and the blessings of abstinence. Some of the characters are very well conceived. Daffodil, by Maude M. Butler, the story of a brave (but we fear thoughtless) little maid who wanders away from home, causing her parents great alarm, but becoming the means of rescuing a pain-stricken, helpless waif.

Into the Unknown West, by Frank Mundell (Gall and Inglis). The story of Columbus woven into a pleasing tale, which the boys will read with delight and perhaps some little emulation.

The Sound of the Streets, by Mrs. O'Reilly (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.), depicts a life of hardship and self-sacrifice amidst the slums of London. It is a story of real interest to young and old.

The Mother's Friend, Vol V. (Hodder and Stoughton). This tastefully bound volume is really what its title claims, a friend and helper to mothers among their restless little ones, who must be amused and interested somehow.

The Christmas Number of The Queen (1s.) includes attractive supplements, two of them in colours. The central pages give portraits of the Queen's grandchildren. The Lady double number (6d.) is largely devoted to the display of fashion.

Rivers of Water in a Dry Place (Religious Tract Society). A new edition of an old book, telling the simple yet stirring story of Dr. Moffat's life and labours, toils and triumphs, in Bechuanaland. Such records are ever fresh and stimulative.

The latest addition to Nisbet's "Scripture Handbook" series is devoted to St. John. The notes and explanations are by Rev. J. H. Whitehead, M.A., and the volume will be of special service to such as cannot consultmore exhaustive works. (1s. 6d.)

The Berridges of Silver Lea. By Sydney Watson. (2s. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.) This is a book that will interest the young, and instruct all who may read it. The story is entertaining in a high degree, and has a distinctly spiritual purpose.

Prayer Thoughts: some names and titles of Christ devotionally considered. By Rev. N. A. Garland, Vicar of St. Matthew's, Brixton. (Elliot Stock.) A book of small size, with eighty titles of our Saviour thoughtfully expanded. The index at the end is an excellent idea.

Matches that Strike, edited by Charles Bullock, B.D. (5s. "Home Words" Publishing Office). A collection of anecdotes, incidents, and pithy paragraphs, gleaned from many sources, which will serve admirably as a storehouse of parable and illustration for teachers and preachers.

Olive Chauncey's Trust, from the facile pen of Mrs. E. R. Pitman, is well described as a story of life's turning points. Much of the book is devoted to the exhibition of the evils of intemperance. The heroine is a noble character, a model for young women in the higher ranks of society. (2s. 6d. Partridge.)

The Man who Spoiled the Music, and other stories, by Mark Guy Pearse, is a bright little volume, dedicated to Lady Henry Somerset. Gospel truth and temperance counsels are enforced in Mr. Pearse's inimitable way, the various narratives being characterised by amusing dialogue. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Margery Hamilton, by M. H. Howell (Gall and Inglis). A girl's life-story, her need of patience, her difficulties in the unconverted home until her father is won through affliction. There is much to commend, much that is wholesome, much our girls will like, and yet withal a certain carelessness in style which somewhat jars on the reader.

Thoroughness: Talks to Young Men, by J. Thain Davidson, D.D. (1s. Partridge & Co.) We have read with zest former volumes of the kind from the same pen. Dr. Davidson knows young men and how to talk to them. He is ever racy, fresh, and practical, and in this his latest issue no less so. We warmly commend the book to workers among young men.

Rev. Charles Bullock has sent forth very attractive "Christmas Numbers" of his magazines. Goodwill to Men is the title of the Fireside extra; Small Change is a Home Words companion; and Popsie belongs to the Day of Days series. The first costs sixpence and the others a penny. Good engravings brighten wholesome reading matter from the pens of well-known writers. ("Home Words" Office).

John Nelson, mason and missionary in the heathen England of the eighteenth century, is a very attractive little biography from the sympathetic pen of Annie E. Keeling. The life and testimony of the early Methodists have an important message for the Church of to-day. Miss Keeling reckons this humble but zealous fellow-worker of the Wesleys among the truest benefactors of his age and nation. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

In The Epworth League Rev. John Hugh Morgan describes a young people's society which has grown to large proportions among the Methodists of America. It has many features in common with the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. The pages contain suggestions which workers among the rising generation will be able to turn to good account. (Rochdale: Thomas Champness, "Joyful News" Office.)

The Thinker. The December issue completes the second volume of this serial. The contents include an exposition of the First Psalm by Dr. Ginsburg, and a thoughtful article on the classical learning of St. Paul. The abstracts of "current thought" in several countries deal with some topics of great interest to inquiring minds. It is regrettable that several of the Hebrew quotations should be disfigured by typographical errors. (1s. Nisbet.)

The Servant of Christ. By Archdeacon Sinclair. (E. Stock. 5s.) Avoiding purposely doctrinal and controversial points, the author illustrates holy living in a great variety of ways. He takes examples as diverse as King Alfred, Saint Louis, Tyndale, and our great reformers, pointing out the inner unity of cause and goal. His chapters on Duty, Obedience, and Loyalty are well-timed. To some parts of the chapter on "Conversion," some will possibly take exception. With the outspoken words on the "Unemployed," the "Poor Law," and "Christian Benevolence" most will agree. We cannot but thank God for such a book from so influential a divine.

Strange Yet True, by Dr. Macaulay (5s. J. Nisbet and Co.), is a wonderful collection of "interesting and memorable stories retold." The stories are culled from the records both of past and present, and certainly have the quality of extraordinary variety, as will be seen when we state that they include, in one department of narration, sketches of the Spanish Armada, the Gunpowder Plot, and the loss of the Royal George; and in quite another branch of literature accounts of the Brothers Haldane, Fred. S. Arnot's African experiences, and James Gilmour's work among the Mongols. The handsome volume is a perfect treasury of notable incidents in history, and is sure to become a favourite with boys.

The Sermon Year Book, and Selected Sermons for 1892. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Here are sixteen full discourses, fifty comprehensive outlines, and a collection of anecdotes and illustrations gathered from sermons of the past year. Another feature is a list of sermon texts of the year, with information as to the periodicals in which full reports may be found. The preachers being men of widely different types, the discourses are characterised by considerable variety of teaching as well as style. But there can be no question that, with its full indexes of the portions dealt with, the volume will prove very suggestive to hard-worked preachers. Last year's issue of the Year Book was good, but this is much better.

Among the Welsh Hills. By M. C. Halifax. (3s. 6d. Hutchinson & Co.) John Desborough, in his last moments, regretted that he had disinherited his daughter Florence because of her marriage against his wishes. He died before signing a will in her favour; and his right hand man, Stephen Meredith, came into the fortune under a will previously made. The daughter was kept in ignorance of the intentions of her relenting father; but in the next generation matters were somewhat equalised, for Meredith's son found in Florence's daughter, Gwenny Llewellyn, a good wife, and so Dimlands estate was enjoyed in combination by descendants of the two parties to whom it had been left by its former master.

The Religious Tract Society.—The Outlaw of Huntstown. By the author of "Constable 423." (2s. 6d.) Here we have the story of an inveterate poacher, whose hand was against every man, and every man's against him, who is subdued and at length changed through the power of Christian love. The characters are forcibly and vividly drawn. Then we have four capital school reward books. Ragged Simon; Ina and Kitty (2s. each); Katherine and I and Iltid's Friend (1s. 6d. each), real, capital, and wholesome stories for boys and girls. Every-day Life on the Railway. By W. J. Gordon. (2s.) A reprint of a singularly informative series of papers on railway work which appeared in the Leisure Hour.

The Teacher's Synoptical Syllabus, by Rev. Charles Neil, M.A. (15s., Nisbet.) This is the first part of a "Comprehensive Scripture Lesson Scheme" prepared with the view of increasing the efficiency of day and Sunday School teachers. It takes those parts of the Old and New Testaments which are most suitable for teaching, in convenient sections, arranged in such a manner that the scope and structure of each book may be perceived at a glance. The syllabus seems to have been drawn up with considerable care. Copious appendices give a number of reference tables, chronological, historical, and genealogical, also many maps and diagrams for blackboard purposes. We regret to have noticed a number of vexatious misprints in the proper names occurring in these tables. Though calculated to prove of real service to teachers, the work seems to have been planned on too large a scale to be generally adopted.

Bible Studies. By Geo. F. Pentecost, D.D. 3s. 6d. (Hodder and Stoughton). Dr. Pentecost's series of Bible Studies for the special help of Sunday-school teachers is already well known. This new volume deals with the International Lessons for 1893, which include subjects dealing with Israel after the captivity; portions of Job and Proverbs; the life of Paul from the commencement of his mission work in Europe; and parts of the Epistles. Others besides Sunday-school teachers will be interested in such subjects, and will find pleasure and profit in these studies. It is in all respects worthy of its predecessors. Dr. Pentecost does not accept the conclusion of advanced criticism, though enough is said to show that he is not unacquainted with them. The book is the result of patient study. Bible narratives are clearly and carefully told, and lessons of a Evangelical and practical character are enforced.

Her Majesty the Queen has accepted a copy of Mr. Cha Cook's work, "The Prisons of the World," and has writte to thank the author for the volume. There are thre editions, 1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. 6d., according to bindin (Morgan & Scott.)

Cassell's Penny Stories are well illustrated and wor reading. Thomas Keyworth and A. R. Buckland are amon the authors of the first seven numbers. The series deserv a large circulation.

The Four Gospels and the One Saviour is a new year address by Rev. David Johnson, B.A., Newtownhamilton, C Armagh. (1d. Belfast: Religious Tract Depôt, Royal Avenue.) It is instructive and stimulating.

The Ruby Almanac and Text Book for 1893 contains text for every day in the year, arranged under various sub jects. There are also original hyms and choice extracts (1d. J. W. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay-park, N.)

The December issue of the Baptist Messenger is accom panied by a Denominational Year Book and Almanac fo 1893. The contents include information regarding th Baptist churches in and around London. (2d. 61, Pater noster-row.)

Miss Charlotte Murray has issued through Castell Brothe two choice booklets (6d. each), prayers in verse. One entitled Morning and the other Evening. The pages ar artistically illuminated, so that the little books, which ar envelope size, will form interesting presents during th coming season.

Rev. Charles Bullock's excellent booklet, The Forgotte Truth: The Gospel of the Holy Ghost, is now in it fiftieth thousand. The pages deserve prayerful study a the present time, when so many are calling upon God t clothe with power the word of the Gospel and the life o faith. (2d. "Home Words" Office.)

The Praying Church: the Living Church.—A sermo preached at Park Hill Church, Nottingham, by William Crosbie, M.A., LL.B. Such a discourse is always in time and we could wish its rehearsal in the ears of church mem bers everywhere. Copies may be had on application to Mr D. Butcher, 2, Wellington-villas, Arundel-street, Notting ham.

We have received the following new year addresses fro Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling:—The Will of God; or God is Love, by Lady Beaujolois Dent; "Beneath Thin own Almighty Wings," by Rev. George Everard, M.A. "Wake up, Jim," by Rev. P. B. Power, M.A.; and Be Kind by J. Forbes Moncrieff. The last is addressed to the young (All 1d. each.) Dr. J. Elder Cumming has written Christ at the Christian's Heart; Shall he come in? (6d. pe dozen.) Two new booklets for the young, by Eva Traver Evered Poole, are The Rock and The School Races (1d each.)

Dear Friends

I most earnestly solicit your help on behalf of the young children under my care and the poor mothers who so bravely fight life's battle against such fearful odds, and I hope that you will by your generous aid enable me to continue this work of mercy, as any withdrawal of help at this season would inflict much suffering; but I trust that I shall not so close my twenty-second year of labour which has brightened so many lives that are cast amid the shadows

Yours in the rescue of the helpless,
MARIE HILTON.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

IS EVANGELICAL in its Doctrines, UNSECTARIAN in its operations, SCRIPTURAL in its methods, and PIONEERING in its character.

The living Agent, who has himself proved the Gospel to be "the power of God unto Salvation," goes down among the people, and from the "Word of Life," proclaims to all, salvation through faith in the Lord Jesus.

METHOD OF WORK.

1. By visitation in the Homes, Workshops, Factories, Places of Public Resort, &c.
2. By conducting Open-Air Services, when by speech and song, men are called to repentance.
3. By holding Meetings for the exposition and enforcing of Divine truth in Cottages and Mission Rooms.
4. By the judicious circulation of Scriptural tracts and Christian literature, and urging the people to attend the House of God.
5. By "special" visitation of the sick, the sorrowing, and the dying.
6. By seeking to reclaim the drunkard and to promote habits of thrift.

498 MISSIONARIES ARE NOW EMPLOYED.

CONTRIBUTIONS are urgently needed for continuing this important work amongst large classes who are to a great extent outside the influence of the Churches.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 18.—1 SAM. VII.

Twenty years of utter neglect of the Ark and abernacle were a grievous break in the history of e redeemed people, and during that time they ere exposed to the incursions of the Philistines, efore which Shiloh itself may have been demolished cr. vii. 12, 14). Similar breaks in our holy fellow- ip and walk with God will lead to similar results. hen the Ark, representing the Lord Jesus, is not its rightful place, there is for us also the invasion tyrannous and cruel sins, which make havoc of e holy institutions and resolves of other and ppier days.

When such has been the case, there must be the dging and putting away of the Baalim and shtaroth representing the principle of self-energy d the hidden evil of our hearts. We must pour t our hearts in humble confession as Samuel ured out the water on the ground. And we must new the entire consecration and devotion of urselves to God, as symbolised in the whole burnt fering that Samuel made.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 19.—1 SAMUEL VIII.

The sin which Samuel had rebuked in Eli was re- eated in his own family. His sons walked not in s ways. It is easier to detect sin in others than to e free of it ourselves. We should be on the watch; r the power to detect and rebuke does not neces- rily imply that we ourselves are guiltless. Judge urselves, that ye be not judged. "Behold, the Judge andeth before the door."

When propositions are made to us which hurt us, e should do well to follow Samuel's example, and ke them in prayer unto the Lord. When the heart overwhelmed with the prospect of some imminent hange, when we are hemmed in with difficulty, when en rise up against us and such as breathe out uelty, then to roll the whole anxiety to the heart of esus, in the belief that He has made the case his vn, is the clue to right judgment and the secret of a ace that passeth understanding. The Lord will peak to us. Samuel went between the people of od, now telling all the words of the Lord unto the eople, and again rehearsing all the words of the eople in the ears of the Lord. In this he reminds of the true Daysman of souls, who lays his hand pon both; and suggests how much we might do as e priests of God and intercessors for men.

Though the king, whom they sought, was to be a isfortune and a curse, the people persisted in their quest, and it was granted according to a principle the Divine government, that man gets what he portunately seeks, though it breeds leanness in his ul. To what fatal loss, however, the people ex- osed themselves, when they exchanged the royalty Jehovah for that of an earthly sovereign—the eocracy for a monarchy! O my soul, see to it that ou dost not forsake the fountain of living waters r a cistern of thine own hewing.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 20.—1 SAMUEL IX.

Saul was a choice young man in those early days; sembling, perhaps, the young man whom Jesus ved. But only those can properly rule who have throned God as King of the inner man, and, as his ter-life proved, this had not been the case with ul. Wayward, self-willed and impetuous, he could t rule others, because he did not rule his own irit, and he could not rule himself because he had t learned to obey. Coincidences are providences. he lost asses brought Saul in contact with Samuel. is ineffectual search for them, and his servant's owledge of the habits of Samuel, brought them to e city at a most opportune moment, for the pro- et had just come there for a special occasion. In- ed, they seem to have met him in the highway. ut the inner history of all this is revealed in God's ords to his servant: "To-morrow about this time will send thee a man, and thou shalt anoint him." et us trust God to find us the men we need to help in his work. They may come to us on quite nother errand, or even as though led to us by some ishap, but we shall hear his voice suddenly saying, we encounter them, Behold the man of whom I ake.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 21.—1 SAMUEL X.

The prophet sketched to Saul the events which ere to happen on that and successive days. All ere known to him, therefore, ere he came to them, d in each case he was to act as the occasion sug- sted and seemed to demand. Thus our life-course s open before God. We have been created unto od works, which He has before ordained, that we ould walk in them. But instead of prying into e future, let us leave Him to unveil it as we come it, and, above all, to enable us to act in each new stance as it becometh the Gospel. We are bidden walk as He walked; let us, therefore, ask Him to e in us and walk in us. When we seek the anoint- g of the Holy Ghost in the spring of the day, his cred unction will remain with us, and will teach us all things, and we shall know what He would have us do. "God is with thee," to guide, and keep, and prosper with his blessed help and grace.

Often in life we meet bands of prophets, and we catch the holy fire from their hearts, and for a little we burn with holy enthusiasm. But "another heart" is not enough, we need another's—that is, the will, and purpose, and indwelling power of the Lord Himself. It is not enough to possess Him, we must be possessed by Him. Not the Spirit mightily on us only, but mightily in us. Not gift alone, but grace.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 22.—1 SAMUEL XI.

What the fiery cross did in olden times to arouse the people of Scotland to resist the invader, was accomplished by these pieces of slaughtered oxen. But there was also a Divine compulsion laid on the hearts of the people. The Spirit of God came on Saul, and the fear of the Lord fell on the people. It is our duty to carry the summons of the Gospel into all the world; but after all we need the co-operation of the Divine Spirit to stir and move the hearts of men. We may plant or water, but God alone can give the increase. In these latter days the Spirit of God is mightily at work, and the immediate symptom of his operations is unity. "They came out with one consent, or as one man."

Here was Saul's vindication, and he was able to treat the opposition of the few with generous magnanimity. It is very beautiful to hear his ascription of all his success to God. "The Lord hath wrought salvation in Israel." But see how far we may go and yet become castaways. This man, who spoke and acted thus, was yet to perish by his own hand on the field of Gilboa. Let us beware. We say again, it is not enough to have the Spirit on us; He must be in us.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 23.—1 SAMUEL XII.

Let us live so that when our work is done we may be able to call God and man to witness that we have behaved ourselves holily, and righteously, and unblamably; and that our hands are free from the blood of men.

In the margin of R.V. the Lord is said to have made Moses and Aaron. It is He that hath made us; we are his workmanship, the work of his hands, and our Maker becomes our husband. Let us be more pliable beneath the touch of those hands that reach down from heaven to mould men; or, if we are conscious of having been marred in his hands, let us ask Him to make us again, and to send us as He sent Jerubbaal, and Bedan, and Jephthah, and Samuel.

The history of the past dealings of the Lord is full of wholesome instruction, especially when we see that forgetfulness of the Lord has always involved us in captivity and sorrow; whilst repentance and the putting away of sin have immediately brought about a turn in the tide of outward and inward prosperity.

"The Lord will not forsake his people." What a precious word is this. Even though we believe not, yet He abideth faithful. He works for his great name's sake. Throughout the Bible we find that God must maintain the honour of his name, which involves his character and truth. "I had pity for my holy name" (Ezek. xxxvi. 21). Therefore with what certainty must prayer prevail which asks in his name! It is a blessed thing to fall back on the covenant, ordered in all things and sure, by which our God has bound Himself.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24.—1 SAMUEL XIII.

This chapter is the dividing-line in the history of Saul. Up to this point his influence had steadily waxed, henceforth it began to wane. And it is worth noticing that, even before the offering of sacrifice on which the sentence of rejection had been pronounced, there had been a subtle declension which had spread to the people, so that they followed him trembling. How different this to the victorious march on Jabesh-Gilead! Already the Lord had departed from him. The lordly oak is rotted at the heart long before the storm lays it low in the forest glade.

Saul's sin lay in distrust. He saw the people melting away from his side. He thought that something ought to be done, but he lacked that calm assurance and spirit of quiet waiting which faith always imparts. And so because Samuel did not come till late in the appointed period, though he arrived ere it expired, he took the matter into his own hands and offered sacrifice. Ah, it is hard to wait for God on the mountain brow, whilst human counsellors urge action, and every moment's delay seems a life-time, and the case is becoming desperately urgent. Let us then remember that the cause is as much to God as to us, but that He is waiting till He can interpose with most effect; let us not force ourselves and offer. In acting thus we shall show that we possess the temper which is an absolute pre-requisite for the Divine service. God can only use those who trust Him absolutely; and he often tests them by long delay. The established life must be a life of faith. Nothing else can impart it. We must literally and at all costs keep the commandment of the Lord. To do otherwise is a folly and a sin.

DECEMBER 25.

The Birth of Christ. Luke ii. 8—20.

Golden Text. Verse 10.

Lowliness and majesty appear in the announcement of the Saviour's birth. The lowliness is seen in the place where, the time when, and the persons to whom, the announcement was made, not in Jerusalem, but in the fields near to Bethlehem, a city with glorious memories of Ruth who gleaned there, and of David who there kept his flock, but now become little as the prophet foretold (Mic. v. 2), the tidings was first published.

It was made at night, when only the wakeful shepherds could receive it, and while the great multitudes were asleep.

Did not the wise men rightly conclude that such an announcement would be made in the king's palace, or at least to the chief priests and rulers? So we should have thought. But again God's thoughts are not ours. Lowly shepherds, while engaged in their humble calling, probably devout men, as this narrative suggests, who were waiting, like Simeon, for the promised Saviour—these were the first to receive the glad tidings. Wealth and rank do not purchase any special tokens of Divine favour. Better a hut where He abides than a palace without Him.

The glory is seen in the angelic appearance (9—14). First the bright light of the Divine Glory shining about them; then, the first angel, probably Gabriel (i. 19—26). God gave the revelation as the shepherds were able to bear it. If the sight of one made them afraid (9), what would have resulted if the whole multitude had burst upon them at once? Then the message (10, 11). The place, the name, the work of the Saviour, are all described. Then the song (13, 14). Singing is the natural expression of overflowing joy. The angels find occasion for such joy in the birth of a Saviour for men. How much more should we rejoice to whom this Saviour is given!

The example of the shepherds is deserving of special notice. Note first their faith. The rapture did not last. Soon the angelic visit was a thing of the past, but when it was over the shepherds are full of faith in the fact that the Saviour is already born. "Let us go," not to see whether this thing is so, but to see the thing itself (15). Their blessing consisted not in having had the heavenly vision, but in having believed it. Next, their obedience. Faith is not an excuse for indolence, but the mainspring of action. They showed their faith in the message by their prompt (16) obedience to it. How many remain unsaved, because, though they have accepted the Gospel statements they have never acted as though they were true. Their action led to experience (16). They found just what had been told them (12). This is the way faith grows. The order thus far may guide other enquirers. First the message, then faith, then obedience, and then experience. Do seek the experience before the obedience of faith.

The shepherds also become evangelists (17, 18). The good tidings was for "all people" (10). Having been favoured to received it first they did not keep it to themselves. Note that in thus witnessing to others their own joy increased (20).

Illustrations.

The Angels' Song.—Not only to the shepherds, but to other souls has this song brought deliverance from fear. A preacher once repeated it during his sermon, saying with great rapture again and again, "Good will to men, how sweet it is!" A woman present, who had long been in great distress of soul, cried out, "And to me also." The word brought deliverance to her.

The Shepherds' Prompt Obedience.—Bishop Hooper, writing to certain Godly persons, who had been taken prisoners while engaged in prayer, said, "Read the second chapter of St. Luke, and there ye shall see how the shepherds, as soon as they heard that Christ was born at Bethlehem, by-and-by must go to see Him. They did not reason with themselves who should keep the wolf from the sheep in the meantime, but committed their sheep to Him whose pleasure they obeyed. So commit all things to Him. He will help the husband, He will comfort the wife, He will keep the house. Cast all your care upon God."

MR. MICHIE, CULLEN, at a conference held lately at Portsoy, instanced the case of the parish of Deskford as an illustration of the good results following the abolition of the public-houses. About eighteen or nineteen years ago the last public-house in the parish was done away with, and, ever since, although the old topers still took their dram when they went to neighbouring places, drinking customs have not prevailed among the young men, and a healthy temperance sentiment has pervaded the parish.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. A. J. Harrison is giving this week a series of Christian evidence lectures in St. Martin-in-the-Fields.

Misses Mary Agnes Daniels and Agnes Elizabeth Daniels have been accepted by the C.M.S. for missionary service.

Last week the C.M.S. Committee took leave of the Rev. and Mrs. G. W. Coultas, who are returning to Hang-Chow, Mid-China.

Canon Vaughan, brother of the Dean of Llandaff, has resigned the vicarage of St. Martin's, Leicester, which he has held for thirty-two years.

The Bishop of Chester has issued a pastoral on religious education, urging that, apart from Christian teaching, there is no stability for the nation.

Rev. Dr. Allan, Vicar of St. James's, Bermondsey, is compelled by ill-health to seek release from the work he has discharged for the past eighteen years.

During the Agricultural Hall Cattle Show, Rev. W. H. Barlow held, as in former years, a service for the drovers, keepers, and other attendants on the animals.

Rev. Thomas Walker, lately returned from Tinnevelly, gives a hopeful account of the work there, especially as to the missionary character of the native Church.

A series of lectures on Church history are being given in Norwich Cathedral. Archdeacon Farrar gave the opening lecture on Ignatius and Polycarp: their lives and times.

A meeting on behalf of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, addressed by the Bishops of Durham, Liverpool, and Southwark, Sir T. Fowell Buxton, and Canon Favell.

Mr. Hugh Stowell Phillips writes to the C.M.S. describing the attack upon himself and his wife at Kien Yang. It is interesting to learn that inquirers and others showed much kindness to the missionaries, although in some instances they suffered severely for doing so.

The Archbishop of Dublin, who has been in Madrid opening a church, and holding ordination and other services, has encountered many difficulties through the intolerance displayed. The political crisis appeared to have disorganised municipal affairs in Madrid for the time being.

The reception of Manchester District Y.M.C.A. delegates at the Bury Rectory on Wednesday week was a unique event in the history of that body, and it is probably the first time that the Bury Rectory has been the scene of a gathering of delegates belonging to different religious denominations.

The Record believes that the three main subjects likely to be discussed at the Islington Clerical Meeting of 1893 will be (1) The Development of Religious Education in our Universities, Colleges, and Schools; (2) The Support and Extension of Evangelistic and Pastoral Work; and (3) The Right Use of the Press.

The foundation-stone of a new church has just been laid in Pointon Fen, near Billingborough. This church will supply a long-felt want in the district, as the Fen people of five parishes, extending over an area of about nine square miles, have hitherto had very limited opportunities of attending a place of worship.

A meeting was held at the Council House, Birmingham, last week, to make preliminary arrangements for holding the Church Congress in that city next autumn. The Bishop of Worcester presided. The necessary committees were appointed, and £2000 was subscribed towards the £4000 required as a guarantee fund.

A new brotherhood—the "Brotherhood of Clean Lips"—has been formed at Rochdale. Archdeacon Wilson spoke at a meeting in connection with it yesterday week, and said that notwithstanding the spread of education, better housing, and more wholesome food, there was a tendency to greater vulgarity and coarseness of language among the very class they were trying to elevate. He thought that a brotherhood might do much towards effecting a reform, aided by the day-school and the Sunday-school.

Wednesday in last week was observed by the members and friends of the Church Association as a day of humiliation and prayer in consequence of the recent Lincoln judgment. Meetings for prayer were held at Exeter Hall in the morning and afternoon, and in the evening a Protestant demonstration was held in the large hall. Lieut.-Colonel Sandys, M.P., presided, and amongst those present were Sir Arthur Blackwood, Captain Cobham, General Sir W. Olpherts, General Sir John Field, Captain the Hon. C. E. Hobart Hampden, the Hon. P. Carteret Hill, Colonel E. H. Legge, Colonel Adams, Colonel Alves, Sir Robert Phayre, Colonel Robinson, Major Hewett, Mr. E. C. Boville, Canon O'Connor, General Heath.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At St. John's Wood Church the fifty-first anniversary has just been observed.

Rev. Alec Moir has been recognised as pastor at the Old Meeting, Bedworth.

Union Chapel, Horselydown, has called Rev. W. A. Linnington, who has accepted.

After five years useful ministry at Birdbush, Rev. T. Jones has accepted a call to Otbery.

Rev. E. Evans, of Great Yarmouth, is removing to Ramsden-street Church, Huddersfield.

Rev. J. E. Drover has felt compelled through advancing ears to close a forty-five years pastorate at Wincanton.

Mr. George Clarke, formerly town missionary in Dorchester, has been welcomed to the pastorate at Lulworth.

Rev. R. F. Brown, whose wife died very suddenly a few weeks ago, has felt compelled to resign his charge at Kirkby Stephen.

Revs. Dr. Pentecost, D. Burford Hooke, and Hugh Price Hughes have just united in conducting a special mission at Tolmers Square.

Prince's-street Sunday-school, Gravesend, reports 540 scholars and 45 teachers. Ten scholars have joined the church during the year.

At Selhurst-road, South Norwood, Rev. A. G. Bridge, who aboured with Rev. R. J. Ward at St. Helens, has now commenced his pastoral duties.

A new mission-hall at Newick has been opened by Rev. J. B. Figgis. The building seats 200 persons, and has cost £450, towards which £253 has been raised.

The Society of Christian Endeavour connected with Grimwade Memorial Chapel, Ipswich, reports an increase of membership from twenty-five to 118 during the year.

A new church is in progress of formation at Southampton An iron chapel has been erected in the upper part of the town, and is to be formally opened on Wednesday next.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, M.A., concluded on Sunday an eight days' mission at Ware, under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour of High-street Chapel.

At Hawley-road, Kentish Town, Rev. W. H. Allen will enter on the pastorate at the new year. Mr. Allen has laboured for ten years at New Camden Chapel (Primitive Methodist), and during his ministry the chapel has been rebuilt, and schoolrooms, etc., added, at a cost of £3000.

The members of the congregation who recently left Toller Chapel, Kettering, have been holding services at the Temperance Hall. This place proving too small, the new Board schools have been engaged, the services to commence there on January 1. The Sunday-schools are carried on in the British schools.

BAPTIST.

Rev. John Hazelton has accepted the pastorate at Wattisham.

The cause at Hill End, Droitwich, is flourishing and growing.

Houghton-street Church, Southport, has raised over £1000 towards the Centenary Fund.

Rev. E. Diffey, son of the late pastor, has accepted the pastorate of Poulner Church, Ringwood.

Rev. B. T. Dale has accepted the oversight of Lynton-road Church, Bermondsey, for six months.

Rev. M. Higgins, after fifteen years' ministry at Melbourne, has accepted the pastorate at Haddenham.

The eighty-fifth anniversary of the work at Romney-street, S.W., has just been held with much interest.

Mr. Percy J. Smart, of the Pastors' College, has accepted the pastorate at the Tabernacle, High Barnet.

Rev. W. G. Hooper, of Bridgnorth, has accepted the pastorate at Union-place, Longford, near Coventry.

In connection with Ebenezer Chapel, Bacup, £1037 has been raised during the year in aid of foreign missions.

A special effort has been made to extinguish the debt incurred in the renovation of the Stevington Old Meeting House. A sale of work realised £31, leaving about £8 yet to be liquidated

Pastor L. Ton Evans, of Cadoxton, Barry, leaves next month for mission work in Jaemel, Hayti. Five years ago, when he commenced in Cadoxton, there was not one English Baptist cause, whereas there are now three flourishing churches, and Sunday-schools numbering over 500 scholars.

Such an instance as the following is worthy of note:—A chapel, erected at a cost of £236, has been opened in the village of Rothersthorpe, Northampton. During its erection the congregation has worshipped in the National schools, the use of which was granted by the rector, who also sent a contribution towards the building fund, and a letter expressing good wishes.

We observe that The Baptist Magazine for this month contains a portrait of Rev. Evan Thomas, of Mare-street Chapel, Hackney, with a sketch of him by Dr. Todd. A correspondent, writing on the subject, says:—"Certainly Mr. Thomas is included in the first rank of the many able and effective preachers and devoted pastors for whom London is indebted to the Principality."

In the Peckham Rye Tabernacle, on Friday week, an anti-opium meeting was held. Rev. John T. Briscoe, who occupied the chair, maintained that what is morally wrong cannot be legislatively right. Rev. J. S. Adams (seventeen years a missionary in Burmah and Inland China) and Mr. W. Raju Naidu (late editor of the Madras Eastern Star) also spoke of the intolerable evils of opium.

At Leeds, Blenheim Chapel has been re-opened after enlargement. In connection with the work at this chapel and its mission-room in Camp-road a large number of agencies are in operation. With the reopening of the chapel it is intended to inaugurate a forward movement. A thorough house-to-house visitation of the district surrounding the chapel is to be carried out. A bright and hearty service will also be conducted every Sunday evening.

METHODIST.

A special and very fruitful mission has been held at Monument-road, Birmingham.

A large new school-chapel has been opened in Bolton, paving the way for a new chapel.

The Methodist Extension Committee has been seriously considering the claims of Guildford and Devizes for fresh effort.

A very successful fourteen days' mission has just been conducted at London-road Chapel, Buxton, by Rev. J. Dudley.

Mrs. Lees has conducted a series of special services at Redfield, Kingswood, and a large number have professed conversion.

The Home Mission Committee in the Lincoln district is organising special aggressive efforts similar to those carried on so successfully last winter.

The Colchester Mission Band is doing excellent work in four divisions, one of which consists of ladies only. These go out four or five miles to work the village chapels.

A letter from Rev. F. Galpin, of Ningpo, states that Rev. W. E. Soothill, of Weuchow, proposed leaving Shanghai on October 21 for England in the French steamer Saghalien.

Special missions, attended by the ingathering of many persons into church fellowship, have recently been witnessed at Howden, in the Crook Station, at West-street, Hull, and at Shotley-bridge.

The third anniversary of the St. Peter's Mission, Leeds, has just been held. The ladies' meeting proved remarkably successful, and indeed the whole work of the mission appears to be greatly prospered.

The arrangements made for the annual missionary meetings of the United Methodist Free Churches, to be held in London on April 24 and 25, 1893, are such as to warrant the expectation of great success.

This year the receipts for foreign missions from the home districts received at the Wesleyan Mission House greatly exceed those of last year. They amount in the aggregate from all sources to over £100,000.

A very interesting discussion took place the other night in Goole on Methodist Reunion—referred to in our last issue. Various points of divergence were revealed, but the whole tone was hopeful of progress towards unity.

An interesting anniversary of the Stockwell branch of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society was held last week at Studley-road Church. Rev. George Sargeant had an encouraging story to tell of Gospel triumphs in the West Indies.

Rev. David Hill, with the aid of other Chinese missionaries, has been holding a series of conventions in various parts of the country: not so much for the sake of raising funds as of awakening and instructing thought on missions in general, and on work in China in particular.

The Lancashire Welsh Mission is in vigorous operation, and already there are five preaching places on the plan—Spring View, Leigh, St. Helens, Farnworth, and Tyldesley. The churches and congregations rapidly increase. Steps have already been taken in some of the places to erect chapels.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. S. Wilkinson has been called to the pastorate of St. Peter's, Liverpool.

The work at Shaw-street, Liverpool, is reported as in every way encouraging.

At Whalley Range, Manchester, the annual missionary services have just been held with good results.

The Cavendish-road Church, Leeds, report good progress and much encouragement during the past year.

Rev. W. H. Claggett, of St. Louis, has been conducting a special mission at East India-road Church, Poplar.

Rev. A. C. Alexander, of Stoke Newington, having broken down in health, has received a three months' leave of absence.

The twenty-eighth anniversary has just been held at Cardiff, and Dr. Monro Gibson has addressed large audiences.

The committee of selection at Regent's-square have resolved to recommend to the church Rev. D. Fairweather, of Kinfauns, N.B.

Rev. Alexander Macrae, of Greengairs, N.B., has received a call from Crown-court Church, London, and has signified his intention of accepting it.

Rev. John Levack, of Saddell, Argyleshire, was the preacher at the bi-monthly Gaelic service, in Crown-court Church on Sunday afternoon.

Rev. R. M. Thornton, of Camden-road Church, has just received into church fellowship seventeen young people from the Sunday-school and Bible-classes.

The meeting to welcome Rev. J. G. Train to his new sphere at Upper Norwood is to be held on Tuesday, December 20. Mr. Train's coming is looked forward to with great interest and hope.

Rev. E. Hewitt, minister at Aldershot, reports that a mission founded by his congregation at Heath-end has outgrown its present premises, and that a site had been secured for a mission church.

At the annual meeting of the Kilburn Mission in connection with the St. John's Wood congregation, it was mentioned that the membership under Rev. T. Finlayson Darroch has risen from 260 to 300.

A very practical Sunday-school Conference has just been held in Highbury Church. Rev. Dr. Pentecost described Sunday-school methods in America. Revs. R. M. Thornton, James Paterson, Dr. Edmond, and others also took part.

The magic lantern Sunday evening services which were carried on last winter in the Town Hall, Gateshead, with such marked success by Rev. R. Stewart, have been resumed again this season, with a promise so far of even greater success than that which attended them last year.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The venerable Isaac Sharp and the young missionary Isaac Mason have left Shanghai together for Chung-King. Both were well and in the best of spirits. Mira Cumber was to follow ten days later.

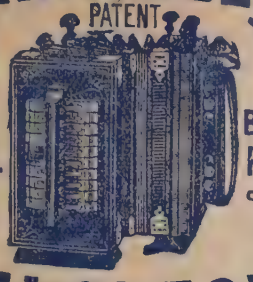
Mary Anne Marriage Allen sailed for America on the 30th ult. in the Majestic, and expects to labour in the Southern States all through the winter, chiefly among the coloured population, towards whom her heart has long been drawn out.

"The Park Home a Success": The Worker informs us that this home for Friends in Chicago during the great Exposition there next year will cost early applicants "one dollar a day for room and board," with the advantage of meeting Friends socially from all parts. English Friends going ought to apply soon.

The people of Báchdát, in Syria, who some time ago became Protestant, and requested the Friends of Mount Lebanon to accept them, have just refused the solicitations of Bishop and Patriarch and French Consul to return to priestcraft and tyranny, notwithstanding tempting offers of money and various "advantages." The Friends labour among them.

The Christian Worker gives the following résumé of "conclusions of Conference" of the American yearly meetings recently held:—"To participate in World's Congress of Religions; publishing house recommended to the yearly meetings; pastoral system endorsed; history of meetings to be preserved; uniformity of discipline not adopted; Foreign Mission Board approved; duty of Church to cities referred to Friends at home; Y.P.S.C.E. unanimously approved." Perhaps 60,000 members were represented in the above Conference.

FALLEN ASLEEP.



At Ambleside, on 2nd inst., that being the first anniversary of her husband's death, Mrs. Perry, aged seventy-seven, widow of the late Bishop Perry.—At Newport, Essex, Mr. Joseph Nowell, a leading helper in the Congregational Church.—At Littlehampton, on 1st inst., aged seventy-nine, Rev. W. Knight, for twenty years pastor in the town.—At West Cliff, Ramsgate, Mr. Isaac Howling, a faithful disciple.—At Bury St. Edmunds, Mr. D. S. Death, a devoted Sunday-school worker and superintendent.—At Wigton, Mr. Thomas Moffat, who had passed the age of 102 years.—At Church Hill, Walthamstow, on 3rd inst., Miss Emily James-Davies, a faithful young worker.—At Ipswich, Mr. Walter Moffat, aged seventy-eight, the eldest of four brothers who laboured long and well in Christ's cause.—At Grantham, Mrs. Harrison, a loving helper of many.—At Woodford, Mr. J. Bland, known and valued in the Baptist Church.—At Airdrie, N.B., on 1st inst., Rev. W. Fulton, aged eighty, a beloved pastor.—At Dewsbury, Mr. William Newsome, aged seventy-seven, a useful local preacher and Sunday-school worker.—At Camelford, on 30th ult., Rev. Joseph Batten, aged fifty-seven, an earnest Methodist minister, but recently appointed to the circuit.—At Belmont Park, Lee, on 1st inst., Archdeacon Whately, rector of Littleton, and only son of the late Archbishop Whately.—At Branksome, Bournemouth, on 30th ult., Rev. G. B. Boraston, formerly vicar of Wendron-with-Helston.—At Moseley, on 1st inst., Rev. James Eagles, vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Birmingham.—At Henlow, Rev. W. Holesgrove, formerly curate of Felixstowe.—At Worcester, Rev. G. H. Knight, of Bromsgrove School.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessings during the mission to be held by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh from January 1 to 15 inclusive at the Chatham Soldiers' Home.—For Mission Services in St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth.—Also a Mission at Kellaton, near Kingsbridge, South Devon.

THE ZULU CHRISTIAN CHOIR sang most acceptably at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, in Aldersgate-street, on a recent occasion. Their rendering of songs, some new and some familiar, afforded great pleasure. The choir are open to engagements for services, etc. Their charge is very moderate. All particulars can be obtained of Mr. Msane, 3, Colherne-road, Kensington, S.W. This man is an earnest Christian. He, his wife and sister, and the two young men who accompany them, are the direct fruit of Christian missions. Mr. Msane is a schoolmaster at Pietermaritzburg, and a local preacher. They all speak and sing in English, with perfect competency and finish.

The case is that of Mr. JOHN BOYD, of KILMARNOCK, N.B., which appeared as one of my weekly cases in the first week of May. (The patient was in a "hopeless state" until applying to me. The doctors had said his lungs were so diseased he never could recover.)

Mr. ALEX. SCOTT, of PERCETOWN, DREGHORN, AYRSHIRE (Missionary), says:—"I personally knew Mr. J. Boyd, whose testimony you published a short time ago. I knew him before his illness and can testify that he is a living wonder. I am thankful for his case being published. I often refer to it in recommending your wonderful cure. Others in this district can say the same as John Boyd."

LETTER FROM AN OLD PATIENT (Case No. CLXVI. of my Book).

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER'S HANDBOOK,

And Record of Inquirers and Converts.
Price 8d.; post free 9d.

The Record says about "Out of Egypt":—

"We know of no book more excellent for a gift to young people; yet the oldest may draw instruction from it."

The Christian Leader says of "In the Volume of the Book":—

"There are few popular books about the Bible that we are prepared more heartily to recommend than that of Dr. Pentecost. It is richly experimental, is adapted to the special need of our time, and unites manly vigour and trenchant criticism with intense spiritual fervour and tenderness of feeling."

The Christian Worker's Handbook prepared by one who has had wide and lengthy experience in Revival Work, is specially intended for use in the "Inquiry Room." It contains a striking selection of Texts on Sin and Salvation, for ready reference by the Worker. It has five closely-printed pages of Hints to Soul-Winners; four pages for List of Persons to be prayed for or Conversed with; an Inquirer's and Convert's Card, with the Name, Residence, and other particulars regarding the Inquirer; and also a solemn Form of "Covenant with God," to be signed by the Convert—to whom is handed a Duplicate Copy to be placed in his or her Bible.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF MRS. BOOTH.

THE MOTHER OF THE SALVATION ARMY.

By F. de L. BOOTH-TUCKER.

EDITION DE LUXE (in Three Volumes of about 500 pages each),

WITH NINETEEN STEEL ENGRAVINGS, FIFTY ILLUSTRATIONS, AND MARGINAL NOTES.

No pains and expense have been spared in making this Edition a really handsome memorial of the late MRS. BOOTH. It has been specially printed on first-class paper in convenient types, with profuse marginal notes. The Three Volumes, each containing about 500 pages, are handsomely bound. There are three steel engravings of MRS. BOOTH, one of these being from a daguerreotype taken at the time of her engagement. There are also 16 other steel engravings of GENERAL BOOTH and the various members of the family. In addition to the above there are portraits of some of the leading officers and friends of the Army, including Mr. Samuel Morley, Mr. T. A. Denny, the late Earl Cairns, Mr. John Cory, Mr. Stead, and Mrs. Josephine Butler. Several excellent full-page engravings of some of the principal meetings and events recorded are included.

Three Volumes. Half leather, marbled edges, Two GUINEAS, NETT.

LIBRARY EDITION (Unabridged) in Two Volumes,

WITH PORTRAITS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

Two Volumes, cloth, FIFTEEN SHILLINGS.

In order to place the Memoirs within the reach of all a POPULAR EDITION has been issued in smaller type and with the omission of marginal notes, but otherwise unabridged. The Two Volumes contain the same letterpress as the Luxe Edition. Process portraits take the place of the steel engravings. The illustrations are numerous, and greatly add to the attractiveness of the book.

To be obtained from—

UNION HALL MISSION.—URGENT APPEAL.

Will Christians help us with funds to maintain our spiritual work among the poor in several parts of this metropolis? We also wish to help poor Christians with Coals, Bread, Clothing, and Orders for Groceries and other Provisions, as well as to give Teas and Dinners, if funds are supplied. There are many poor and deserving unemployed to whom help at this time would be specially acceptable. Funds are most urgently needed, and may be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.; or to—

ROBERT BILKE, ABERGELDIE, GREENHILL ROAD, HARLESDEN. Director of the Mission.

"ROBIN" DINNERS.

The Robin Dinners, originated by the Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., Editor of Home Words, began thirteen years since, with three or four hundred guests; about forty thousand now enjoy a Christmas treat every year at a cost of sixpence each. But London alone contains several hundred thousand children who would rejoice to be "made happy for an evening;" and at sixpence each for the dinner and evening's entertainment, to welcome these would cost no less than £12,500. All we can do is to hope that the time will come—the earlier the better—when every poor child in London will know by happy experience what a "Robin Dinner" is. Will our Readers help use to hasten the time by doing what they can, and remember that "every little helps"?

☞ WILL YOU HELP TO GIVE ONE EVENING'S HAPPINESS TO ONE CHILD THIS WINTER?

The whole funds go straight to the children through the agency of those who know best how to dispose of them—either the Clergy living and working in the poorest parishes of London, or through the Ragged School Union.

The Committee feel it necessary to state that they cannot be responsible for appeals sent out in the name of Robin unless bearing either the address of Coomrith, Bournemouth, or No. 7, Paternoster Square, London.

We print a few striking sentences from a few of the many letters we have received from well-known clergymen and others.

WILL YOU ONLY READ THEM?

The Rev. T. GIVEN WILSON, of Forest Gate, writes:—"Your 'Robin' Dinners have brought most timely help to hundreds of poor children in this large, poor parish (Plaistow) of 21,000, whose parents have been almost destitute through illness or scarcity of work. The praiseworthy feature about them is that not only is a substantial meal of roast beef and plum pudding provided for the children, but a happy evening, which must make them feel that there are kind hearts in the world who, for Christ's sake, think of them and care for them."

The Rev. J. H. SCOTT, of Spitalfields, writes:—"Thanks very much for so kindly renewing our grant for 'Robin' Dinners. Our poor children have not much to brighten their lives in a place like Spitalfields, and anything that comes to them like a ray of sunshine must have a beneficial effect. They are truly grateful."

JOHN KIRK, Esq., of the Ragged School Union, writes:—"The 'Robin' Dinners have been a boon and blessing to our Ragged Robins. To have been without them would have meant so much less joy and sunshine in the lives of thousands of sad pinched faced ones who cannot be said to have too much gladness in them at any time. Our Ragged School teachers join with me in heartfelt thanks for the help."

The Rev. A. J. ROBINSON writes:—"While I was Rector of Whitechapel I had 'Robin' Dinners from your Fund. It did good in many ways, and, coming about Christmas time, made them sharers in the joys of the season. In far poorer parishes—even than Whitechapel—they are an inexpressible boon, being sometimes the only bit of brightness during the winter for the little ones."

The Rev. SEPTIMUS BUSS, of Shoreditch, writes:—"We send our warmest thanks for your renewed grant this Christmas. We have a large population of struggling poor in this neighbourhood, and their children look forward eagerly to this annual treat. Their only playground is the street, and your benevolence sheds a gleam of light on their gloomy surroundings."

The Rev. G. E. ASKER, of Stamford Street, writes:—"I know not how to thank you for your kind promise of the grant. If only your committee and the subscribers who so generously support you could see something of the pleasure they are affording to our little ones, they would not need my thanks at all. There are few hearts, thank God, that are not touched by the sufferings of our poor children, and when by a little self-denial on our part we are able, if only for a brief space, to banish the clouds and give them a ray of bright warm sunshine, even our own hearts are the better for it, whilst the children have something to look forward to, to enjoy, and to talk about, which they seldom, if ever, forget."

All contributions are acknowledged in THE NEWS, published at HOME WORDS OFFICE. Reports of dinners are also given.

An audited Balance Sheet is published every year. Subscriptions should be sent addressed to—

"ROBIN," Coomrith, Bournemouth; or to the Hon. Secs., C. ASHTON BULLOCK and JOHN KIRK, "Robin" Dinner Fund, 7, Paternoster Square, London, E.C.

☞ Will those subscribers who have not yet remitted for the ensuing year kindly do so at once? Full particulars will be found above.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries?

We are glad to note that the Evangelical Alliance in their call to the Week of Universal Prayer, expressed the desire that the greater part of the time of the meetings may be devoted to prayer. While it is doubtless important that the thoughts of those who assemble should be directed by addresses, it is neither needful nor desirable that the speeches should be the principal feature of the meetings.

As the years roll on the great theme of Christmas becomes dearer and dearer to the heart of the believer; multiplied meditation makes him wonder with a great amazement at the condescension, love, and wisdom represented in that Jewish babe in the Bethlehem hostelry. With all saints on earth and in heaven we would unite, and would ask our readers to unite, in ascribing praise to the Triune God for the message of the first Christmas morn.

"Oh, the glory of the story,
Oh, the sweetness of the song."

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is pre-eminently a Gospel to the poor. Christmas comes round at a season when the poverty of the poor is most pressing and hard to be borne. While, therefore, we sincerely wish for our readers a full measure of the joys of Christmas, we trust they will find their chiefest delight in ministering to the needs of others. "Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

Bishop Taylor, of Africa, has paid another brief visit to England. On Monday he addressed the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, describing the nursery and industrial departments of his deeply interesting mission. We commend to the prayerful attention of our readers the Bishop's letter appearing on page eight of the present issue.

The National Anti-Gambling League have done a public service in moving the Public Prosecutor to take action against the "missing word" competitions in various London papers. The demoralising and dangerous results of these lotteries were assuming gigantic proportions. This young League, which is showing itself alive to the insidious evils that attend this form of gambling, deserve all possible support.

Present controversies reveal a double danger. Some disparage the written records of Christianity while thinking to exalt Christ himself. They seem to say "Do not trouble about the accuracy of the narrative ascribed to the Apostles, nor about the validity of their doctrinal arguments, but simply accept Christ, be loyal to his commands, and copy his example." But who is Christ? and what do we know of Him in order to trust Him, apart from what the New Testament teaches? To impugn the record is to undermine the claims of Christ to our confidence.

On the other hand some are in danger of relying solely on the facts and doctrines about Christ apart from accepting Himself. Faith is not mere acceptance of a record, though this record is a necessary foundation, but it is a full acceptance of Christ Himself. "To believe, dead faith is not enough; saving faith must lay hold on a living person."

Disappointment is often felt because many who seem very enthusiastic in their profession of repentance and faith at missions soon become indifferent to religion. Is it not because, in spite of true teaching, they begin by their own works instead of Christ's? They try to make themselves feel right instead of going to Him to make them right. "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself." We must be in Christ first, that his life in us may be as the sap producing fruit. "In times of excitement many kindle a fire with their own household stuff—wood, hay, stubble, and build up a fire which blazes to the sky; but if you pass that way in a few days nothing is left but a heap of ashes." Instead of thus kindling a fire for ourselves, we should go at once to Christ for the true fuel that will permanently burn, and for the true flame that alone will ignite it.

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols." We may make idols of anything—even of sacred truths. Some have made an idol of justification by faith, and some of holiness. Justification by faith did not die for us. Holiness is not our great high priest. Jesus, the Son of man, the only begotten Son of God, died for us, and Jesus, the Son of God, is passed through the heavens to become our Great High Priest. Just as Israel idolised the gifts and neglected the Giver, so may we idolise doctrines and overlook Him who is our Life. Any view of Christian truth which turns our attention in upon ourselves more than out of ourselves upon Him who redeemed us, and who now appears for us in heaven, in whom and with whom we have died and been raised again, that we may walk in newness of life, is sure to bring us into bondage.

We travel fast in these last days. When Dr. Wiseman was made Cardinal there was considerable questioning as to the legality of his position. When, two years ago, Cardinal Manning was accorded precedence of Anglican prelates at a public function, there was a spasmodic outcry. All this has now been left far behind. The Times of Saturday contained a letter entitled "Clearing House for the Unemployed," and signed as follows:—

✠HERBERT, Archbishop of Westminster.
WILLIAM SINCLAIR, Archdeacon of London.
JOHN CLIFFORD, ex-President Baptist Union.
HUGH PRICE HUGHES, West London Mission.
J. TRUSCOTT, Pres., United Methodist Free Churches.

If these gentlemen had merely signed their own names, there would have been no ground for objection; but we cannot but express our pained surprise that the Protestant Church of England and three of the Evangelical denominations should be represented as giving place and precedence to the Church of Rome, against which the signatories all professedly protest as an apostasy from the truth. While priories, and convents, and monasteries, and Jesuits, and Romish priests, and nuns, and schools are multiplying all over the land, this act seems to us an extraordinary use, not to say abuse, of position and influence.

If overlapping of religious effort is an evil to be avoided in the future, it is not less an evil to be remedied, where possible, in the present. In many small villages there are several weak struggling causes representing separate denominations. On the Sunday may be seen the spectacle of two, sometimes more, preachers coming several miles each to preach to a few people. The difference between these several causes is not in the doctrine they hold, but mainly in the fact that each building is put in trust for its own particular denomination. If all were combined a good man could be supported able to give his whole time and energy to the work, and the local preachers could be spared for work in their own districts. We are not insensible to the difficulties attending the remedying of this evil. Highest honour will belong to that community of Christians who, in villages where this evil exists, will be first to accept denominational extinction in order that the work of God may advance.

The large and influential deputation which a few days ago waited upon the Chief Secretary for Ireland in regard to Sunday closing of public-houses in Ireland included representatives from every part of the country, and of all denominations and degrees. The speakers made out a very strong case in favour of the present bill being extended to affect the five exempted cities, and also in favour of legislation to compel the earlier closing of public-houses on Saturdays. It is a pity, after fourteen years' experience of the existing law, and upon the evidence that the majority of the people of the country are in favour of further restriction, that the Chief Secretary was only able to utter the usual platitudes about the difficulties of the Government in dealing with such a question.

A more befitting time than Christmastide could not have been chosen by Mr. Brodie-Hall, of Eastbourne, in which to draw attention to the treatment of old women in workhouses. His long and able letter in The Times should be read by every ratepayer. He draws special attention to the apathy of the philanthropic public on Poor Law matters generally, and their mistaken belief that in a State department Christian philanthropy will neither find welcome nor scope.

Nor is he content to photograph vividly the general discomfort of the "House"; he is also prepared with remedies which he believes will go far to abolish the evils of which he complains.

1. The election on every Board of Guardians of at least three or four capable women.
2. The election to the important post of matron of women of education and refinement.
3. The prohibition of the Local Government Board to the employment of paupers as nurses in the infirmary and sick wards.

When we learn that there are only 136 women on the 648 Boards of Guardians in England and Wales, we must grant an unstinted sympathy to female inmates of workhouses.

One of the sweetest incidents of Mrs. Booth's early life is related in her history which has just been issued from the press. She was no more than a girl; she was running along with hoop and stick, when she saw a poor man being hauled along to prison, a jeering mob hooting him. He seemed utterly friendless, and this feeling so strongly impressed the little girl, that impulsively she sprang to his side. She felt determined that he should feel that at least one heart sympathised with him, and she walked beside him all the way to the prison. How beautifully significant is this incident in the light of her self-sacrificing life.

We have before us the "Twenty-seventh Report of the Royal Derby and Derbyshire Nursing and Sanitary Association, 1891-92." It seems in some respects a model institution, and free from the objections which we have noted elsewhere. It is Protestant and Evangelical, not Roman or Romanising. Special care, it is said, is taken to secure as nurses women of decidedly Christian character. They are not "sisters" but simply "nurses," keeping their own Christian names and surnames. The charges made to the public are reasonable, for a first-rate Christian trained nurse, and "justice is done to the nurses themselves, both in respect of wages, and in taking care of them." In those cases where an extra charge is made, as for contagious or mental cases, the nurse receives extra weekly payment. We recommend our readers to obtain this report. We shall be glad to hear of other institutions conducted on Christian, Evangelical, fair, kindly, practical, and unartificial lines. Whether £25 a year is an adequate maximum payment for a trained nurse may be questioned. It may partly depend upon the amount of bonuses which are distributed and of extra pay.

THE SALVATION ARMY hope to give a Christmas dinner to 5,000 poor and destitute in the shelters and "elevators." The Commissioner asks help "to bring one day's brightness into these clouded lives. The cost will be comparatively small, but as we have no fund for such a purpose, we are bound to appeal to the public for assistance. Donors will be welcome to witness these banquets, which will take place on Monday, December 26 (Boxing Day) at the various centres where shelters, food depots, prison-gate home, match factory, etc., have been established in connection with the Social work." The Gifts of the Magi.

A CHRISTMASTIDE MEDITATION.

By Rev. Julius Brigg.

The scene of the Nativity was the meeting-place of two worlds. Bright ones from the world of light chanted their Glorias in honour of the infant Redeemer, striking the keynote of all Christmas carols to the end of time; "wise men" brought of the treasures of the Orient in honour of the new-born King, presaging thereby the charities of all Advent-seasons yet to come.

Whatever may be our interpretation of those gifts, and however great may have been their intrinsic worth, the conduct of the wise men presents lessons to us more fragrant than the spices of Araby, and of greater value than Ophir's finest gold.

Though the footprints of Incarnate Deity are no longer traceable in our Holy Land, and his voice is no more heard stilling the waves of Galilee, yet is He still accessible to child-like faith, and willing to accept the offerings of reverent love. The supreme lesson to be learned from the devotion of the Magi is that our offerings to the Holy One should be of the best and choicest that we have to give. The principle involved was not brought into the world at the Incarnation; it is at least coeval with human history, and found frequent illustration in patriarchal and prophetic times; notably in the selection of sacrificial offerings, in the furnishings of the tabernacle, in the construction of the temple, and in the requirements of its elaborate ritual.

The truth thus early taught to men received emphatic confirmation from the lips of the Great Teacher, and vivid illustration during the course of his earthly ministry and that of his apostles in the days of the early Church.

Mary gave the best she had when she unsealed her treasured vase, and outpoured its precious perfume as a tribute of her love; and the odour of that offering lingers in the Church to day.

To bless the alien earth, Heaven gave its highest gift, when "the Father sent the Son, to be the Saviour of the world;" and the appreciative Church outpours its gratitude in the ever new Doxology, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

And what are to give? Nature presents her choicest treasures to her Creator. Vested in her robes of many colours, she stands, a jewelled priestess, at his shrine. She has incense to offer from unnumbered flowers, and beauties which no words can tell. Hers are the glories of the morning, and the sunset's dazzling sheen, while ceaseless harmonies arise from woodland, stream, and sea. These are some of Nature's offerings, but what are we to give?

LIFE—in its early promise, bright with the dews of the morning. Life—in its lovely unfolding, when the blossoming time has come; and Life—in its ripened glory, when the wealth of golden sheaves tells of the harvest home. Life—with all its unmeasured possibilities, physical, intellectual, and spiritual, is to be laid upon the altar, emulating the spirit of one of whom it was said, "Her pen, her pencil, her harp, as afterwards her coronet, were laid at the feet of Jesus."

"Over against the treasury" Jesus still lingers, and knows what we put in and what we keep. Into so sacred a treasury let our choicest offerings fall. So will this Christmas-tide be a season of sweet peace and of holy joy.

African Industrial Missions.

By Bishop W. Taylor, of Africa.

The civilisation and salvation of Africa, a country comprising one-fifth of the globe, with a population of 200,000,000! The light shed upon this dark continent by Christian missions is but the silver lining of the thunder-cloud. The Wesleyan, Church of England, and London Missions in the south, backed by English and Dutch colonies, have made good progress. The Baptist missions, with others, are opening with success on the Congo, West Coast, and in North Africa. But in most cases these missions are employing the same methods of work as have been found adequate in Asiatic countries. All those countries have the Oriental type of civilisation, and the industries suited thereto are fairly adequate to meet the demands of Christian civilisation; so that in those countries missionaries are not required to open schools of industry. But the industries of heathen Africa, barely sufficient for hand-to-mouth subsistence, are utterly insufficient to meet the requirements of civilised life; hence, limiting the education of young heathen Africans to head and heart culture, they become pitiable, pedantic beggars.

My plan is to negotiate with kings and chiefs for mission sites in suitable centres, and, for each station, a grant of land for a mission farm, which, with the implements of civilised industries, becomes an object lesson for the heathen at large and a training school for our pupils.

Again, most missions open their schools mainly to children who have reached what they call the "school age," bordering on to their teens, and full of heathenism. My plan is to place a Nursery Mission in each station, and put into it from ten to twenty boys and girls, from three to six years old, adopted from heathen families, and placed under the skilful training of a competent missionary matron. The little children of Africa are not heathens. They bear the same relation to God as do the children of Christian countries, and they are as teachable as any other children. Thus from their day-dawn we "train them up in the way they should go;" first, in the industries of the farm, workshop, kitchen, and house; second, in the various branches of a common school education; third, in the experience and growth of a genuine conversion to God; fourth, in various lines of Christian work and usefulness among their people.

This plan of work, broadened in its application to the continent, and faithfully carried out, will guarantee ultimate, early, and complete success.

Now, without the slightest interference with the resources and operations of any established missionary societies, earnestly praying for the increasing success of all of them, I respectfully submit a simple plan by which a million workers can heave on the home lever, and lift the dark continent into the sunshine of Divine light and glory.

I do not propose to organise a Missionary Society, nor to antagonise any, nor to tie to any, nor to be under the control of any. My work in Africa, with forty stations already opened among wild heathen tribes, is under the most perfect organic provisions of the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church. What I propose is the voluntary formation of Africa Industrial Mission Bands, entirely undenominational, regardless of age, sex, or colour—anybody and everybody who may feel inclined to lift a little. Each band to consist of ten members and upwards, with a leader approved by the band. The payment of one dollar a year to my Africa Fund will entitle any person to membership, or paying as much more as they may desire. Each band will be duly enrolled and certified by my agent, and designated and numbered thus :—

"Africa Industrial Mission Band, No. —."

This plan of missionary work indicates the short cut, and the sure cut, for giving Africa to Jesus "for his inheritance."

The march of Mohammedan conquest is appalling; the raids of murderers and men stealers are desolating vast regions of this country; the flood-tide of rum and gin, fed by a hundred steamships, from Christian (?) countries, is rolling in through every port of the dark continent; millions of children in Africa slide down yearly from the vale of infantile innocency into the "horrible pit" of heathenism, so that our home-millions of helpers should rush to the rescue at once. The rank and file of the masses of mankind require leadership, not bosses. Administrative ability to lead is competent to organise an Africa Industrial Mission Band of a dozen members. Let all such try, and report the result.

WORK IN A CITY WAREHOUSE.

The old-established and well-known house of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams and Co., on Friday last celebrated the jubilee of their missionary society. There was a large attendance of members of the establishment and friends, Mr. George Williams occupying the chair.

The hymn "O God of Bethel" having been sung, and prayer offered, the secretary read the general report, after which Mr. Williams called upon one of the "old and trusted" members of the establishment, Mr. J. A. Robertson, who gave a brief sketch of the past history of this work; and in suitable terms paid a tribute to the memory of the late Mr. George Hitchcock. He also told how the firm had upheld a distinct religious influence upon commercial life.

Mr. Williams then addressed the meeting and seemed at his best. He briefly referred to the "Young Men's Christian Association" as being the outcome of this society, which he had the privilege of founding.

A jubilee hymn having been heartily sung, Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, acknowledged that the meeting was unique in celebrating a history of fifty years of Christian effort. He made pleasing reference to the fact that this establishment does not stand alone in the present in providing for the spiritual welfare of the employees.

Then came the veteran African missionary, Rev. J. J. Fuller, who graphically pourtrayed the emancipation of the slaves in Jamaica in 1834 and 1838, of which he was an eye-witness. He also testified to the mighty power of the Gospel on the West Coast of Africa, relating how human sacrifice and other heathen cruelties had given place to the sacrifice of praise and the services of God's house.

Dr. Pierson gave the closing address. After referring to the enormous strides made to science and human invention during the past fifty years, he spoke of the immense privilege of living in the present day, and showed how it was impossible to be a whole man without Christ in the heart. He referred, in closing, to the life of Count Zinzendorf, and to the grand missionary enterprise of the Moravian Church, which has sent forth one missionary for every ninety-two of its members. The other churches are very far behind, only sending one in five thousand.

The happy meeting closed with the Doxology and prayer; may we hope that the future of this society will be still more blessed than the past.

REV. GEORGE L. BARKER has closed a three weeks' labour in Hartford, Conn. Mr. Barker's work here was genuine and lasting. He left for a three weeks' engagement at Grand Rapids, Mich.

A Christmas Quest.

The most eventful hour on Time's dial had struck. God, who had from Earth's earliest morning been unweariedly manifesting Himself to his rebellious children, speaking to them by type, by miracle, by prophecy, by a continual succession of providential deliverances, had at length brought over the nations, and especially over his own more favoured one of the Jewish people, the hush and darkness that precede the dawn. There had been no audible voice since Malachi had told, four hundred years before, of the rising of the Sun of Righteousness, and it seemed, indeed, as though the earth had been smitten with the curse which forms the closing word of his prophecy.

A time of strange perplexity to the few "devout" ones who still "looked for redemption in Jerusalem." A time, too, no doubt, of Satanic triumph that the kingdoms of this world seemed to have passed under his almost undisputed sway, for no one can study the chronicles of the years immediately preceding the birth of Christ without being almost overwhelmed with the horror of gross darkness that covered the people.

And now, at two widely separate centres, the poor bereaved earth was visited once more. In the hill-country of Judea the silence was broken by a midnight chorus of angels, whilst in the far East a day-star arose upon the darkness. Poets have sung and Christian scientists have told of the Star of Bethlehem, but we know no details of the mental process by which it revealed to the Magi the kingly birth of Christ. But we are quite sure that men who were called "wise" in a portion of the globe which had produced a Zoroaster and a Confucius would not be lightly moved to such a journey and such a quest. Astronomical calculations have been made that point with some certainty to such an appearance; but we, who are engaged in a simple Bible study, require not, although we may welcome, any outward confirmation of the inspired story.

These wise men arrive in Jerusalem, guided rightly so far, but not far enough, on their journey; and bring terror and consternation to King Herod by their eager inquiries. Here, for the first time probably, they are brought into contact with a definite Scripture prophecy, and proceed on their northerly route with fresh courage and assurance. "And the star went before them," piloting them to the house where the young child now was, his rude birthplace exchanged for a more comfortable home, standing possibly on the "parcel of land" which Mary's great ancestor, Boaz, purchased with his wife Ruth thirteen centuries before.

It is noticeable that the infant Christ is no longer, as to the shepherds, spoken of as a "babe," for some weeks at least must have been spent in the pilgrimage of these "seekers after God," and He is now described as a young child. We cannot tell by what further token than that of the star the wise men recognised the King of the Jews, but it is evident that to enter his presence was quite enough to banish uncertainty and inspire homage, and at this early stage of his life He was deemed, by no mean judges, "worthy to receive riches," and with lavish hand they poured before Him their gifts of rare Oriental treasure. We may be sure that the exceeding great joy with which they entered that wondrous presence would not fade, as they received minute Divine direction about their return journey, and carried back to their distant home the exulting news, "We have found the Messiah!"

Shall we not gather for our Christmastide edification some of the lessons which this narrative enfolds, some gold, frankincense, and myrrh for the enriching and making more fragrant of our future Christian life?

Those who wait for God are always rewarded. The morning cometh even after the longest and dreariest night. Nothing could be more chilling to the hopes of the godly few who were left in Israel than the present gloom; yet out of it Christ came, the fulfilment of all the yearnings of humanity since the world began. This encouragement is greatly needed to-day. Full many a folded robe is covering secret pain because of hope deferred; because of mysteries, conflicts, disappointments, failures, heart-woundings, that bring over the soul a darkness that may be felt. What is the remedy? An absolute faith in God. Through all this gloom we may hear his words of promise, ringing like sweetest Christmas bells: "They shall not be ashamed that wait for Me."

The very struggle with disappointment, the determination to be brave in the very teeth of difficulty, bring the present enrichment of grit and sinew to the character, like the toughened fibre to the oak that wrestles with centuries of winter storms. It is not those who shrink from the friction of a crumpled rose-leaf, or who only care to walk along macadamised roads, that make God's athletes. Look at Anna and Simeon in their mental and spiritual exaltation of character, and see the result of brave waiting for God, when He seemed, to weaker vision, to be hiding his face from the house of Jacob. And many of us know in our own circle of friends, instances where rough conflict with suffering, mental or physical, has wrought a "saintly patience" so fascinating in its Christliness that we have learned to be content even to see these dear ones endure the chastening.

Perhaps the battle of life goes hard with ourselves. It may be that amidst the joys and greetings of our Christmas there lurk hidden griefs that make > "Discord on the music fall,

> And darkness on the glory."

Let us take heart. It is an old true song that the poet sings, that "sweet are the uses of adversity," but we go farther back, and to a higher source, and are bidden there to "Count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations, knowing that the trying of our faith worketh patience." So in us "let patience have her perfect work."

We find, too, that seekers for God are always guided. It mattered not whence they came, from the East, with almost trackless stretches of country to be traversed, or only from the adjacent pasture-land—a shorter journey but a midnight one, and leading the shepherds, as many would have thought, on a fool's errand. There was equally safe and definite direction for each. It will always be so to those who go steadily forward towards a Divine goal, whether it be for personal salvation or subsequent spiritual blessing. But to us, as to the shepherds and the wise men, it will come from above; let us always seek it there.

And success in this quest always brings joy. "Exceeding great joy" it was in the case of the subject of our study, and it is an infallible law of the Kingdom of God that all loyal subjects shall find that one of its three characteristics is "joy in the Holy Ghost." I like so much the contrast that Dr. Bushnell draws in one of his sermons between the words happiness and joy. Examining their roots he finds one to come from the old Saxon word "to hap," indicating sources outside ourselves, that as the word suggests, are at the best very uncertain. Joy, on the other hand, is derived from the French verb jouer—to leap up—and gives the idea of a perennial spring of satisfaction within. A beautiful comment on the Saviour's words, "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

This is the Christmas joy offered to each reader, not the exciting, fluctuating, unsatisfying happiness of earth, at the mercy of any passing gust of disappointment, but the joy of finding Christ Himself, who alone can satisfy the longing soul, and from whose love nothing can separate.

Percy Park, Tynemouth. M. C. F.

A NEW MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—We have received the prospectus of a new foreign mission, of which the office is at 10, Drayton Park. The director, B. Davidson, the joint secretaries, G. Ernest Jackson and H. C. M. Paterson, the title "The Ceylon and Indian General Mission," and the referees Rev. Geo. C. Grubb, M.A., and Walter K. Campbell, 32, Highbury New Park, N. All communications are to be made to the secretaries, C.I.G.M., 10, Drayton Park, Highbury, London, N.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION. — Mr. Edward Hurditch has since October, been conducting evangelistic services in the Athenæum, Brighton. The venture is a bold one, but already tokens of blessing in growing numbers and professed conversion seem to indicate that the step is a right one. A band of some thirty workers has gathered round on undenominational lines, and the spirit of the whole is good. The Thursday evening prayer meetings have been remarkably encouraging. This is a branch of the Evangelistic Mission, and communications concerning it should be made to the Director, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W., or Mr. Edward Hurditch, 13, Clermont-terrace, Preston Park, Brighton.

Joshua and the Land of Canaan.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

JERICHO.—Joshua vi.

Jericho, palm-girt, standing out, clear-cut in the pure air, and under the deep blue of the sky, in front of the vast precipice of rock down which the road descended from Jerusalem, was filled with many thoughts, chief among which was faint-heartedness. There was no mustering of forces, no issuing forth of the men of war, no sudden night attack upon that host which lay along the Jordan bank, the brown tents pitched around the central pavilion or tabernacle of God. It was as though some mysterious spell had fallen upon king and people, unnerving them, impelling them to stand upon the defensive and await the unfolding of events. "Their heart melted, neither was there spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel."

Israel, on the other hand, was probably impatient, eager to be led to the conflict. The men of war, confident in their might, were eager to match themselves against the inhabitants of the land, and to wipe out in blood the memory of their fathers' defeat at Hormah. Conscious that the passage of the Jordan had been due to the presence of the priests, it may have been that there was a secret desire in their hearts to show that the time had come for the priests to stand aside, whilst they approved their prowess and won the land by might. Thus we can almost hear them saying among themselves, "The priests will have to stay in the camp with the women and children, whilst we go forth to the fight."

But they had to learn that the land was a gift, to be taken by faith and not by effort. God required of them only to obey and wait and trust, whilst the Divine Captain led his celestial hosts to the assault, and achieved the victory. "And the Lord said unto Joshua, See, I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour. And ye shall compass the city, all the men of war going about the city once."

It certainly was the strangest spectacle ever witnessed by a beleaguered garrison. The besiegers did not make an assault, or rear mounds, or place scaling ladders against the walls. They did not, indeed, afford an opportunity for parley or discussion of terms of capitulation. On each side it seems to have been understood that the war would be to the knife—no quarter asked, no mercy shown. Without delay the host of Israel began encompassing the city. "Ye shall compass the city." May it not be rather said that the ark encompassed the city, and that the men of war accompanied it? For in each case, whether the directions were given to Joshua by the Captain, or by Joshua to the host, the particular position of the ark was minutely specified. Indeed, as Joshua came from the Divine interview he appears to have first summoned the priests into his presence, and given them his instructions. After this he turned to the people generally. There is a remarkable emphasis in the words, "He caused the ark of the Lord to compass the city."

It was but a little after dawn. The sun had mounted not far above the eastern horizon. Blue blended with amber in the morning sky. Towards the south the mountains of Moab stood like a mighty rampart, veiled in violet, while the sullen waters of the Dead Sea gleamed like silver at their foot. The belt of desert sand added its dark red to the variegated colours of the picture, contrasting notably with the emerald green of the oasis in which Jericho stood, watered by perennial streams. Then from out the camp of Israel a long procession began to unwind itself. First the men of war, marching beneath their tribal banners; then seven priests, white-robed, blowing with seven trumpets of rams' horns; next the ark of God, hidden by its coverings from gaze of Israelite and Canaanite alike; and lastly the tribe of Dan, closing up the rear.

Towards the city this strange procession made its way, preserving an absolute silence, save that the priests went on continually and blew with the trumpets. With that exception no other sound was heard. No challenge! No taunt! No cry as of them that shout for mastery! For so had Joshua commanded, "Ye shall not shout, nor let your voice be heard; neither shall any word proceed out of your mouth."

The whole host wound silently around the city, as a serpent with sinuous folds, and, when the circuit was completed, to the surprise of the Canaanites, who probably expected an immediate assault, it returned quietly to the camp from which it had emerged some hour and a-half before. And the rest of the day passed without further incident. "So they did six days."

On the seventh day, the circuit of the walls was repeated seven times. And at the close of the seventh, Joshua's voice rang out on the still evening air the command, "Shout, for the Lord hath given you the city." Then the priests blew a blast upon the trumpets; the people shouted with a great shout, that reverberated through the hills around, and was perhaps answered by the feebler voices of the women and children from the camp; and the wall of Jericho fell down flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city. And as an inspired writer reviewed the incident in years long after, he quoted it as a remarkable instance of that faith which unites the hearts of all the saints in one, as a thread a number of diverse beads. "By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they had been compassed about for seven days." In various directions we may find a counterpart of these remarkable experiences:—

1. In Christian Experience. If Egypt represents our conflicts with the world, and Amalek our conflict with the flesh, the seven nations of Canaan represent our conflict with the principalities and powers of wicked spirits, who resist our entrance into the heavenlies, and our practical realisation of what Christ has wrought for us. Entrenched behind the ramparts of some stronghold of difficulty or habit, they defy us and threaten to arrest our progress in the Divine life. Who is there amongst us, or who reads these lines, that does not know, or has not known, of something—a cherished indulgence, a friendship, a pernicious entanglement—reared as an impassable barrier to the enjoyment of those blessed possibilities of Christian experience which are ours in Christ, but which for that reason seem beyond our reach? That thing is a Jericho.

Now it cannot be the purpose of God that anything, however deeply rooted, should shut his redeemed ones out of the heavenly places, which are theirs in Christ—even though it should be the result of their own sin, or mistake, the heirloom of early indiscretions, the entail of trespass off the narrow path. I have met with those who have declared that they have for ever forfeited their right to the richer experiences of the blessed life because they have wrought some wickedness in the past. What though it has long ago been forgiven, yet it has left its shame, its scar, its fatal offspring, by reason of which the path to Canaan is barred. I have met with others who, eager enough to enjoy all that may be experienced on this side the Golden Gate, yet point to some hindrance in the way, the lasting memorial of days when the spirit was less on the alert and conscience less sensitive; and for this cause they too fear that they can never do more than encamp, beyond the Jordan indeed, but on the fringe of the Land of Promise. Again, it may be asked, Who is there that has not stood, at some period or another, before a Jericho, right in the pass to Canaan?

To all such there is infinite sweetness and comfort in the word spoken by the Great Captain to Joshua, standing with bared foot on the holy ground, "See, I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour."

Be still.—The hardest of all commandments this. That our voice should not be heard! That no word should proceed from our mouth! That we should utter our complaints to God alone! All this is foreign to our habits and taste. As death is the last enemy to be destroyed in the universe of God, so is the restraint of the tongue the last lesson learnt by his children. We like to air our grievances; to talk over our ailments; to compare ourselves with others; and to discuss the likeliest remedies. We tell our friends our secrets under strict promises of confidence, to discover in bitter experience the truth of the Master's words, that what is told to the ear in closets will be proclaimed upon housetops.

It is only the still heart that can reflect the heaven of God's over-arching care; or detect the least whisper of his voice through its quiet atmosphere; or know his full grace and power. Only when we have quieted ourselves as weaned babes, have we reached that position in which God can interpose for our help. Not dumb towards God, but dumb as the dove among strangers, or as the lamb before her shearers. "Be still," saith God, "and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen, I wil be exalted in the earth." And that soul may well be still and wait, which has learnt that the Lord of hosts is beside it, and the God of Jacob its refuge. To that Friend it hies to pour out its secret agony. In that home it nestles as in the covert of a great rock, sheltered from the blast.

Obey.—As in this story so in grace, there must be co-operation between God and man. The walls of Jericho could fall down only by the exercise of Divine power, but the children of Israel must needs encompass them. Only God can give a body as it hath pleased Him to the seed corn, but man must plough and sow, and reap and thresh, and grind. Only the Son of God could multiply the loaves or raise the dead, but man must provide and distribute the broken bread, and roll the stone from the sepulchre door. Only God can remove the difficulties that stand in the way of an entirely consecrated and blessed life, but there are commands and duties which it is incumbent on us to fulfil.

In some cases we are withholding obedience that we should give at once. There are things which we ought to do which we are not doing. And there is equal danger in doing more than we should. Endeavouring to scale walls which we are told to encompass. Shooting before the word of command has been uttered. Making the circuit of the city oftener than the once each day prescribed by the Divine ordering. It is so hard to feel that we do more by doing less; that we save time by resting quietly in our tents; that it is vain to rise early and late take rest, because He giveth to his beloved while they sleep.

Whatever then is clearly borne in on us as the will of God, either for us to do or discontinue doing, let us immediately perform, and leave it to Him to do all the rest. Some must bear the sacred ark in witnessing to the Gospel; others must blow on the rams' horn perpetual blasts of victorious anticipation; others, again, must face the daily routine in silence; but our position should ever be the prompt soldier-like one that rang out through Joshua's noble words, "What saith my Lord unto his servant?"

Have Faith.—Look away from all your preparations, and even from your God-commanded acts to God Himself; and as you do so your difficulties will melt away, that stone will be rolled from the mouth of the sepulchre, that iron gate will open of its own accord, those mighty walls will fall down flat. And it shall come to pass that the obstacle which threatened to make the best life impossible shall minister to such an unfolding of God's very present help as shall furnish fuel for praise in all coming years.

Whatever it be that seems an insuperable difficulty to your enjoyment of the best of those things which Christ has purchased, hand it over to your Saviour; wait before Him in silence, till you know what He would have you do; be sure in the meanwhile to put off all that belongs to the past, and cleanse yourself from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; then do his bidding, at whatever cost; and in the meanwhile believe that He is working for you, and that the crooked places shall be made straight, and the rough places smooth, and that the glory of the Lord shall be seen in your heart and life, so that all who know you shall be compelled to confess that the Lord has done great things for you. He has given you Jericho. Let your heart already dwell on that glad word. Though the walls stand already, they are as good as gone; and with their ruins in your rear, you shall go forward to possess the land.

II. Also in Christian Work.—The Apostle speaks of strongholds that had to be cast down, and of high things that exalted themselves against the knowledge of God; and asserts that he did not war against such things according to the flesh, and that the weapons of his warfare were not of the flesh, but mighty before God for the casting down of strongholds, and for the bringing of every high and proud thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ.

What need there is for all Christian workers to ponder these pregnant words. The peril of our time is that we should get away from the simplicity of the early Church, which went into the onflict with the mighty superstitions and flagrant ins of its age, with no weapons save those that may e found in symbol in this old-world incident. There were the white robes of priestly purity; the ifting up of the propitiation of Christ; the blowng of the ramshorn, the Gospel message proclaimed vith no silver cadence, but with rude and startling ffect, as a summons to surrender. It was in the se of such weapons as these that giant forms of rror collapsed, and hoary systems of idolatry were issolved like morning mists touched by the warm ingers of the sun.

With what dismay would the confessors and nartyrs, the prophets and apostles of Primitive Christianity view the methods with which we assail he monster forms of vice that confront us. Drink s entrenched behind mighty fortifications, the astions and walls of social custom and habit, of national usage and immense revenues. Impurity as built around itself a girdle of defence, flaunts tself undismayed in our streets, and mocks us from he gilded splendour of music-hall and theatre. The pium traffic laughs us to scorn, supported by Government, ministering to an inveterate habit, villing to pay a handsome sum for its right to exist. The depravity of the human heart is another ericho, in which there are the towers of spiritualism, ndifference, pride, and high imagination, which roudly rear themselves against the law of God. nd in the case of each individual worker there is lmost certainly some Jericho in the apathy of ellow-workers, the spirit of opposition from other Christians, or the special forms of sin that are ampant in the sphere entrusted to his care.

When confronted with all these things we are apt o take counsel with flesh and blood, to fight the vorld with weapons borrowed from its arsenals, and o adopt methods which savour rather of the flesh han spirit. It is a great mistake. And the erichos of evil will laugh us to scorn, as the anaanites would have done if Israel had assailed hem with a poor imitation of the methods of arfare known to that age.

Our only hope is to act on strictly spiritual lines, ecause we wrestle not with flesh and blood, but ith the wicked spirits that lie behind all that is een in this world of men and things. If we can verthrow the dark spirits that abet and maintain, e shall see the system which they support crumble s a palace of clouds before the wind.

Let us be pure and holy, giving time to heartearching in the presence of the Captain; let us ft up the sacrifice and work of Jesus; let us blow he Gospel trumpet of alarm and summons to surender; let us be much in silent prayer before God; et us cherish a spirit of unity and love, as the ribes of Israel forgot their differences in one comion expedition against their foes; above all, let us elieve in the presence and co-operation of God, nd we shall see the old miracle repeated, and the alls of Jericho fall down flat.

III.—Also in the Story of the Church.—This apture of Jericho is surely capable of being read s a parable of things that are yet to be. We know hat the world lieth in the power of the wicked one. has long boasted itself against God, with its ighty walls and gates, and it would seem as if the me will never come of which Psalmists and kings ave sung and spoken in rapturous phrase.

In the meanwhile the various tribes of the Church f Christ have been perambulating about the walls, ubjected to much derision and mockery, though ometimes a sickening premonition of approaching dgment must steal upon the hearts of the votaries f worldliness. For nearly nineteen centuries the rcuit has been made, the trumpet-blast uttered, he testimony maintained. And surely the seven ays have nearly expired. Within this generation, may be, our heavenly Joshua will descend from eaven with a great shout, with the voice of the rchangel and the trumpet of God. Then He will id us shout, the walls of Sin and Evil will fall own flat, and the triumphant armies of Emmanuel ill go straight before them to the conquest of the orld.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.—The Holyhead branch f this Railway Mission has recently been cheered nd stimulated to increased zeal in the Master's ervice by a visit from Mr. Eliot Walton. He as supported during the mission by a number of ocal pastors. Mr. F. M. Cotton, hon. superintendent, ill be grateful if workers crossing to or from Ireland ill stop a night in Holyhead and address the men t the weekly Friday evening meeting.

CHINA AND OPIUM.

Sir,—In the admirable letter you published last week from Rev. Arnold Foster there is one phase which will, I fear, seem discouraging to some of your readers. Mr. Foster says: "I do not defend the Chinese Government, and I believe that it will not now stop the cultivation of opium, but that does not make it right for England to be a partner in this wretched business." Mr. Foster is by no means alone amongst our missionaries in China in his opinion that the Chinese Government is so far reconciled to the opium trade (from which it now derives an annual revenue of about two millions sterling) that it is not likely, even if we stop the export of the drug from India, to take measures for stamping out the home growth.

This, however, is only a matter of opinion; and there are weighty authorities on the other side. Dr. Dudgeon, of Peking, whose position as physician and private secretary to the late Marquis Tsêng gave him peculiar opportunities of knowing the views prevalent amongst the highest officials of the empire, said, at the Anti-Opium Convention of March, 1891: "I assure you, from what I know individually of the members of the Chinese Government, that they are prepared, if the Indian article were done away with, to stop the native growth. The conscience of the country is such that it would be quite impossible for the Emperor of China, who is the father of his people, not to act accordingly."

Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong, who was in this country last season, and who, though he has resided in Australia since his boyhood, keeps closely in touch with the opinions prevalent in his native land, entirely confirms this view. Archdeacon Moule, when in England last year, though by no means equally confident on the point, thought it was still possible, even probable, that Chinese statesmen would be able and willing to grapple with the native growth, if the import from India were stopped.

Rev. C. C. Fenn, secretary of the C.M.S., whose opinions are based on those of the numerous missionaries of that society labouring in China, in The C.M. Intelligencer of March last gave good grounds for hoping that many Chinese officials would "be disposed to take vigorous measures to stop the terrible evil," and that, so far from being checked by the Central Government, public opinion in China would call for, and obtain, from the latter that "paternal Government action" which the Chinese people are accustomed to look for.

The views thus expressed are borne out by those to which Li Hung Chang, the foremost Chinese statesman of the present time, gave utterance in his interview with Mr. Dyer some three years ago, and by the present Chinese Ambassador in London in an interview accorded to Mr. Southall and myself, Dr. Griffith John, Mr. Forster's colleague at Hankow, wrote to the same effect a year ago; but I see that he now writes to your contemporary The Christian World, expressing his "serious doubts" on the point, and states that he "can see no hope for the speedy deliverance of China from the vice, even if the last particle of the Indian article had found its way into the country."

I should like to draw the attention of our friends in China, as well as those at home, to one aspect of this question which I have nowhere seen alluded to, (except in Fenn's article), which contains a brief reference to the change of attitude on the part of British officials in China, in the event of the Indian Government ceasing to trade in the poison. When the British Government, at the beginning of this century, had abolished the slave trade and made it penal to its own subjects, it immediately began a propaganda amongst the countries. Aided and stirred up by volunteer workers, such as William Aden and Thomas Clarkson, British diplomatists honorably distinguished themselves by their earnestness in the cause of the slave. At the close of the Napoleonic wars, British statesmen positively gave up valuable territories conquered in those wars, in consideration of an undertaking that the country from which they had been taken should give up the traffic in human chattels.

Can it be doubted that Great Britain will be equally earnest in promoting the liberation of Asia's millions from the dire slavery of the opium habit, when she has been sufficiently aroused to a sense of her guilt to be willing to put an end to it, by imposing on herself some such pecuniary sacrifices as she made to get rid of negro slavery? and I, for one, hope that she will not leave the whole burden to be borne by India.

Sir George Stainton, probably the greatest authority on Chinese questions in this country at that time, declared in the debate of 1840 on the opium war that the opium trade could never be put down except by the joint efforts of England and China. The circumstances have widely changed since then; but I believe that his words are still applicable, and that from the friendly co-operation of our Government with that of China the people of the latter country can alone expect ultimate deliverance from the terrible national vice which our policy in the past, has mainly brought upon them. I therefore regard the stoppage of the poppy culture in India, not merely as a withdrawal from a national sin and reproach, but as the essential preliminary to the salvation of China from her greatest curse.

SEED SOWING IN AUSTRIA.

Dear Sir,—Some friends having recently asked us if we this year again are in a position to make use of Christmas letters, text cards sheet almanacks, etc., for distribution among the scattered Protestants of the Alpine provinces of Austria, will you allow me to say that we shall be very thankful to receive such (in German)? During the summer months my husband was again privileged to seek out many who are living lonely lives of spiritual destitution, being far away from any opportunity of hearing the Gospel. One little colony of Protestants lamented not having had even the one yearly visit from the nearest pastor during the past twelve months, he having been prevented by illness from going the long journey. How thankful they were for a Gospel address in a room lent by one of their number! Books, tracts, Testaments, and Bibles were most thankfully received.

One brother was discovered in a lonely valley of Italian Tyrol, who had been brought to the Lord by reading a Bible given him in Switzerland when travelling as a hawker of pictures of saints and the Virgin. The same Bible was also the means of the conversion of a friend of his, who is now labouring as a Bible colporteur in South America. What encouragement to go on sowing the seeds, especially the Word of God! The brother referred to is a faithful witness, and his testimony has been blessed to the conversion of quite a little company, who, in the face of much persecution, gather around the Word, and make it the rule of their daily lives. These suffering and lonely ones were greatly cheered by a visit and gift of books.

We desire about Christmas time to send a small parcel of Christian literature to every person whose address we have been able to procure in the provinces of Styria, Carinthia, Upper and Lower Austria, Duchy of Salzburg, the Tyrol and Vorarlberg, so as to let them feel they are remembered and prayed for. This will encourage them in their loneliness, and help them to bear the manifold persecutions with which they are beset. Besides these scattered members of the household of faith we have a goodly number here in Gratz, who regularly attend our Bible readings, young men and young women's meetings. We should like to be able to present each one with a text-card, small hymn-book, or some such little gift. These silent messengers wander from hand to hand, and each being accompanied by prayer, carries a blessing with it.

For the information of those friends who kindly contributed towards our Deaconess' work when my husband visited England this summer, I should like to mention that we have now two deaconesses or Bible nurses at work, caring for the sick-poor in their homes. We have been enabled to open a small nursing-home in which we have four patients —all homeless and friendless—two incurable from cancer and consumption, and two, sixty-five and sixty-eight years of age, helpless and feeble. These poor creatures would have a sad time in the hospitals under the tender mercies of the Romish "sisters."

We ask much prayer for a blessing on this and all the other branches of our service for "The King." Yours in Him, Mary A. Reinmuth.

A SERMON ON HORSE-RACING.

The following has been sent by an Australian correspondent to The British Weekly :—

A great sensation has been caused in Presbyterian Church circles in Victoria (Australia) by the conduct of Rev. J. G. Davies, who is the pastor of an important and influential church at Geelong. It appears that Mr. Davies announced his intention of delivering a sermon on horse-racing, and caused handbills to be distributed broadcast throughout the town drawn up as follows :—

MELBOURNE CUP, 1892.
SOME VALUABLE ADVICE to those interested will be given by the Rev. J. G. DAVIES, M.A.
(the Bookmakers' Friend),
in St. George's Church,
Latrobe-terrace, Geelong,
on Sunday Evening, October 30, at seven o'clock.
All who go to the Races invited to attend, such as—Bookmakers, Backers, Brokers, and Blacklegs, Governors of Colonies, Jockeys and Judges, Publicans, Pickpockets, Drunkards and Debauchees, Members of Parliament and members of "The Ring," Owners of Horses, Ostlers and Officials, Stewards, Spielers, Starters, and Sweep Promoters; Women of all sorts, high and low, rich and poor; Rogues, Thieves, Vagabonds, and Reporters.
ALL ARE INVITED.
WE MAKE NO DIFFERENCE, for
"There is no difference."

On the Sunday evening the church was crammed, a large number being unable to gain admission. It soon transpired, however, that the office-bearers of the church would not allow Mr. Davies to preach what might prove to be an unpalatable sermon, so the Rev. A. J. Campbell, D.D., occupied the pulpit. At the conclusion of the service Mr. Davies, who was determined not to be baulked, delivered his address from the balcony of the manse to about 1,000 persons. It is reported that in consequence of the unpleasantness he will resign his charge.

In the course of his remarks, Mr. Davies referred to the recent failures of land banks and building societies in the colony. "There is an old Book," he said, "which used to be regarded as a rule of life and doctrine, and for your encouragement I will adapt a verse of it: 'Woe unto you fraudulent directors of banks and land companies, who with false balance-sheets and prospectuses have lured to ruin the widow and the orphan and the aged, who could no longer earn their living, and while you were consumed with greed for gain, pretended to be followers of Him who had not where to lay his head, and supposed that your offerings to the church were acceptable to its Master, though with unclean hands and impure heart (being full of covetousness) you brought them to Him. Woe unto you, I say, for with the help of your religious profession you have accomplished the destruction of more widows' houses than the bookmakers, and therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.'" The address in the main, however, was confined to the evils and sin of horse-racing, and concluded with these telling words, addressed to the owners of horses and those who frequent the racecourse. "Noble sirs, let me tell you, you are all accomplices in murder; you are companions of robbers; you who receive bets from bookmakers receive stolen property; you who make and take them are thieves. I charge you before the bar of Almighty God with the deaths of the jockeys killed on your racecourses; with the still worse spiritual death of those who might enter the kingdom of heaven but for you; with all the moral deterioration of the youth of this colony who go mad over betting, and are being ruined by it every year in increasing numbers; with all the corruption of the greatest corrupting, soul-destroying agency of these modern times. God have mercy on you, gentlemen."

COTTAGE HOME, NEW BARNET.

We are most grateful for the loving interest and practical support given to our East-end girls by readers of The Christian. We are now very desirous to make known the needs of our little home at New Barnet for orphan and destitute girls. It is intended for those requiring a longer time of training than we can undertake to give them in the town home. This work at New Barnet, Herts, has been carried on for eighteen months as a country branch of the Home in Globe-road, but it is now being continued on an independent basis, especially as an orphan home.

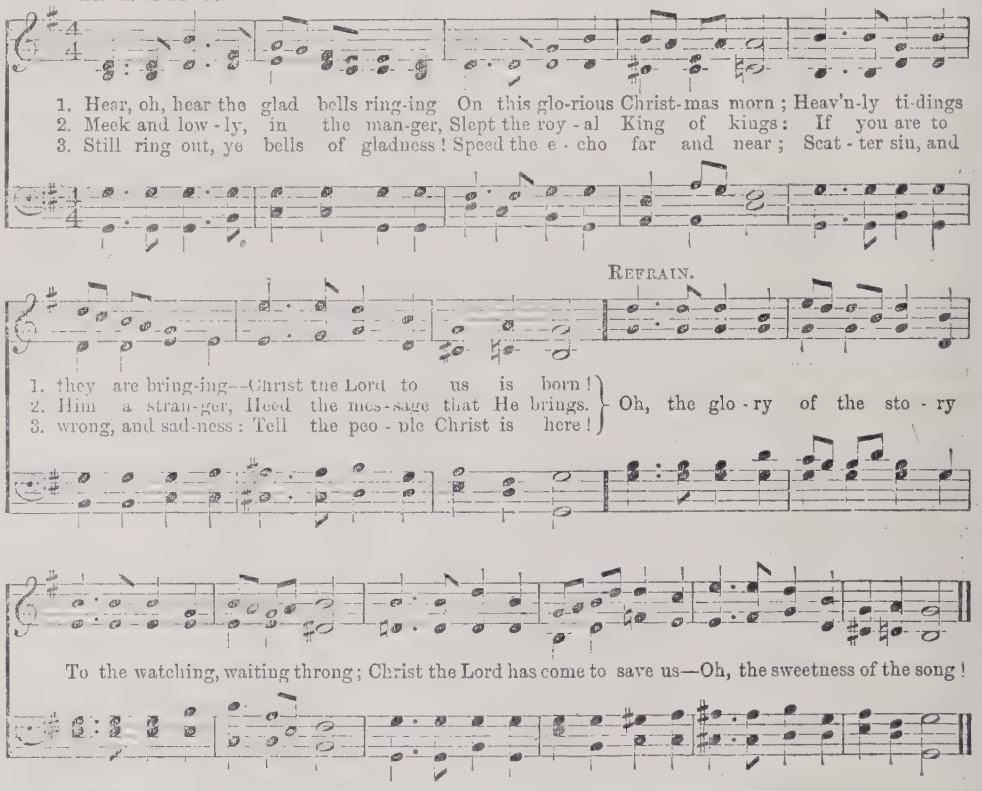
The twelve girls at present in the Barnet Home represent but a small number of the many necessitous ones for whom we are constantly being entreated to find shelter and training. As matters are, we have our anxious moments in regard to the undertaking, as rent and taxes, food and clothing for our family of girls have to be provided. Yet are we confident that He who "faileth not" will incline the hearts of his children to send the help we need for carrying on work to which we have felt ourselves called of God. Two or three cases may be mentioned as samples of those with whom we have to deal.

Listen while I tell you of Robina; she is one of our most promising girls. We rescued her more than three years ago on the very verge of ruin. Her mother had fallen to the very lowest depths of degradation, and did her utmost to drag her child as low as herself, but by the watchful care of Robina's aged grandfather she was saved from such a fate. She was ultimately brought to us, and, thank God, is his now, and a splendid trophy, too!

Little Alice, a timid blue-eyed child of ten, a descendant of the Huguenots, has been motherless for some years. Miserably clad, looking so pinched and starved, she lived in an attic room with her father, an uncle, and two little boys. The father gets a bare living by making crochet hooks, buying bones at the rate of two shillings a score (ivory is too expensive now). His little Alice can neither read nor write, but is a good child, and plods on daily at her A B C. She is a most willing little scrubber. Do pray for this neglected lamb.

Margaret was left motherless when only five, and has since tried to keep house for father, all alone. He was at work, consequently she had never been to school. Now, poor child, she finds it hard to learn. The father is most grateful for our loving care of his only child.

One of our girls who a month before had taken the Lord as her master, when asked how she was progressing spiritually, quaintly replied, "I'm not quite used to Him yet" (meaning her new Master).



Ida, a sad little girl; mother is in a lunatic asylum.

Visitors will be gladly welcomed at Gladsmuir, New Barnet, or at the town home. We are assured that those who see our happy little maidens, rescued from poverty and evil surroundings, and growing up into usefulness, will feel constrained by the love of Christ to cheer our hearts by their sympathy and gifts for the support of the work.

PASTOR JACOB.

In an interesting communication from Pastor Jacob, dated Oroomiah, Persia, Nov. 4 (translated by his son, now studying in London), he tells with regret of the illness of his estimable wife, Moressa. She had not at the date of writing recovered from the fatigues of the journey home and the perils encountered by the way. On crossing the Persian frontier the officials levied blackmail on the travellers, demanding triple the amount usually imposed as a fee on entering Persian territory. The Pastor and his wife were also subjected to fear and annoyance through the attentions of Kurdish robbers, but they ultimately reached home in safety. A large number of their Oroomiah friends, both Christian and Mahomedan, came out a day's journey to meet them, and gave them a most hearty welcome. They were rejoiced to find their family and friends all safe. The Pastor adds:—

"As to our missionary work, we praise the Lord that it has been carried on successfully during our absence by our younger son and other helpers. We intend soon to bring into operation the objects for which we came to England—i.e., sending out one or two evangelists from amongst the native converts, and also to plan the working of the Mission on a larger scale. We need for all this the earnest prayers and support of our Christian friends in England and Scotland."

MR. GEORGE H. SIMMONS and Prof. D. B. Towner have just closed a successful series of meetings in Natchez, Miss. Many professions of faith were made. A correspondent writes: "These meetings seem the beginning of a great work of grace which is destined to sweep through the whole city."

MR. W. LETHABY, though not an agent of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, was received last week by the committee and warmly commended to the prayerful sympathy of the Methodist people. He said that he hoped to go to Kerak by a roundabout route. From the Persian Gulf across Arabia to Kerak was a distance of 1500 miles. It had rarely been traversed by an Englishman. The Bible Society had, at his request, given him Scripture portions in Arabic. These he hoped to dispose of in the cities and villages of Arabia through which he would pass en route.

Revival in Ireland.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN WEXFORD.

THE evangelists of Wexford have brought to a lose the most successful mission that has ever been eld in the town. Major Whittle, assisted by Miss Vhittle and Mr. Stebbins, has held meetings in the Young Men's Christian Association. Large audiences ttended twice each day.

When it was announced that he was coming many mid people feared that the scenes which disgraced he town on his visit over nine years ago would be re-nacted. Then there was a riot, houses were recked, police had to be drafted in to keep order, nd great expense was incurred in making good the amage done by the mob. On this occasion every-ing was changed, and with one solitary exception ot an offensive act or word was offered to anyone onnected with the undertaking. The occasion re-erred to was on Sunday. About three o'clock the Major and his party went along the quay giving ooks and tracts to all who took them, and were re-eived most courteously by the people, except y one respectably-dressed man, who, putting ut his hand for a book, took it, tore in pieces, and, flinging the torn fragments into the ce of the giver, turned round to receive the pplause he no doubt expected, but which the people, ith one accord, refused to give, showing their dis-pproval in no uncertain way.

On Tuesday evening the large hall of the associa-on was crowded to excess, and the singing of Miss Vhittle, who was assisted by a choir of forty voices, nd the singing and playing of Mr. Stebbins, were reatly appreciated. The Major was in his best rm, and before closing asked a blessing on all—on e Protestant ministers, the parish priest, and all hose exertions were for the good of the poor. On Vednesday the mission party left for Dublin, being ccompanied to the railway station by a large umber of friends, who joined in wishing them a eedy return.—Daily Express.

[The "books and tracts" referred to above were opies of the two addresses given by Mr. Moody in e Dublin Pavilion on the "Precious Blood of hrist," reprinted verbatim from the Irish Daily ndependent, the Parnellite journal.]

A Wexford correspondent writes:—

Major Whittle's mission exceeded in interest nd results anything of the kind which has, to our nowledge, ever taken place in this town. It was receded by a regular organised daily prayer-meet-g, extending over a week. This was attended by rotestants of all denominations; great unity was anifested, and the main features of the prayers fered were clearly apparent in the blessings after-rds poured out. Showers of blessing were pleaded r and expected, and very special requests were ade on behalf of the young.

These anticipations were more than realised. he meetings, which began on December 7, were ll attended. The power of the Spirit of God was nally manifested; believers were quickened and reshed; backsliders were restored and souls were rn into the kingdom; amongst the young was the erest and blessing especially seen.

The after meeting, on the closing day, for men d boys, Major Whittle said, was the best meeting the kind he had experienced in Ireland. It was regular stream of testimony. Finally, when at e close those who wished to be prayed for were vited to stand up, the number was too great to unt; probably two-fifths of those present re-onded.

Separating the sexes for after meetings, as was ne on two occasions, appeared to be a good plan. . Stebbins, assisted by Miss Whittle, conducted e of the two ladies' after meetings, and Miss hittle alone conducted the last. Major Whittle, course, took the men's meeting. The ad-ntage of this method was seen in the fact that arly all remained for the after meetings; besides, re time was available for testimony, and less diffi-ty experienced in inducing young people to re-nd to invitations to confess Christ.

Several special meetings for young ladies were d by Miss Whittle, and with most gratifying ults.

The solos by Miss Whittle and Mr. Stebbins, and e duets by both, were a very attractive feature in e meetings, no doubt inducing many previously interested people to attend.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL IN BELFAST.

These honoured servants of God have had another busy and happy week of service in Albert-street Church. Mr. Merton Smith set apart an evening to tell the story of his life. To a crowded house he recited the salient points of his early career in a modest, yet manly, way. We have never seen an audience more deeply moved. Moisture gathered in many an eye during the delivery of the message, and blessing came to many through the thrilling story of God's saving grace.

Each evening found numbers of inquirers to be dealt with, and the workers found happy occupation in turning the seekers to the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Smith has the God-given faculty of reaching men who have been addicted to drink; indeed, he seems to yearn over all the victims of the drink curse with a special solicitude. Numbers have hopefully professed deliverance from this awful curse through the power of the reigning Redeemer.

Among those professing to have received blessing are those at least nominally connected with the various evangelical churches, and numbers of these have come from different parts of the city. Last Lord's Day the evangelist preached with power three times. The audiences were in the afternoon and evening simply measured by the capacity of the church. Crowds thronged the building, and every available spot had its eager occupant.

Mr. Ritchie Bell has been most helpfully and sweetly in evidence all through the mission. Nothing could be more tender or telling than his Gospel songs delivered at the Lord's Day services, entitled "Peace through the blood" and "My son, give me thine heart." The hour was advanced when the last lingerers left the church, and numbers, it is believed, found the closing services of the mission the valley of decision to their souls.

Before stepping into the boat for Scotland last Monday night a final praise meeting was held, which was largely attended. Mr. Smith spoke a suitable and earnest word to Christians, while Mr. Bell sang the old message once more. Mr. A. W, Vance and his male choir were also present, and sang sweetly some Gospel pieces, to the delight and comfort of the congregation. Much prayer is asked that the evangelists may be greatly used of the Lord of the harvest as they go forth on their joyful mission. They are expected to begin work in Lisburn on January 1, 1893. H. IN SOUTH CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—I am at present visiting this district of the Fuh Kien Mission. Your readers will be interested to hear that the Gospel of Christ is making very decided progress amongst these beautiful valleys and mountains. During the past fortnight, I have been privileged to baptize sixty-eight of these people, and we have a large number under instruction. The number of adherents in this region alone is something like twelve hundred.

After a good deal of difficulty, we have succeeded in purchasing land at Sang Pang Taing, where we have some 300 converts, and the Christians, with some external aid, have been able to erect a plain substantial church, and a decent house for a catechist. But I need some £30 to finish everything. My wife is now at home, and will thankfully acknowledge any sums sent to her, at 36, London-street, Basingstoke.

I might add that these churches are almost entirely self-supporting, and that the general funds of the C.M.S. are not available for the purpose.

Yours sincerely,

LL. LLOYD.

King Hwa District, Foochow, Oct. 20.

P.S.A. AT BARNET.—The first report of these services shows that the Lord has blessed the effort to reach outsiders, many such having been converted. Every aspect of the work has lately been most encouraging. The interest now is, if anything, even deeper and wider, and only the other Sunday three men attended and became members, who previously were utter unbelievers, and used to drink the best part of the Sunday. Some of the worst characters have been reached. The workers look forward to the day when every man in Barnet who does not attend a place of worship will become a regular attendant at a Pleasant Sunday Afternoon service, where the Gospel is told out fully, clearly, and faithfully, and in such a way that the men cannot resent it, because it is spoken from the heart to the heart.

FLORENCE INDUSTRIAL HOME.

THE ninth report of the Boys' Protestant Industrial Home at Florence tells of the continued success of the highly important work directed by Dr. Comandi. The Home receives orphans gratuitously, and surrounds them, as far as possible, with the influences of family life. The inmates average a hundred in number. The report says:—

"Instruction is given in five elementary classes, and in two superior sections. Those children who seem to have a special aptitude for study, when they have gone through these classes, are allowed to remain at the Home and follow the course of the normal, technical, or commercial schools of the Government. All our boys, without exception, from the period when they enter the fourth class, begin to learn some trade.

"To meet the wants of many parents, Catholic as well as Protestant, we have added to the Home a section of paying pupils, who are subject to the same rules as the orphans, paying the small sum of 25f. to 30f. per month. The greater part of our pupils, when the time comes for leaving, find themselves alone, without any family ties; we have, therefore, opened a small Christian Home quite close to us, where for 1f. 10c. per day they have board, lodging, washing, etc. Meetings for evangelisation are held in the church or other rooms of the Home, in private houses, and in different places outside Florence.

"Charity is carried on by means of a committee, which meets once a week and decides as to the distribution of money or other help which the Lord has sent us for the poor. Work is given when possible, and after careful inquiry as to their need, bread or meat tickets are distributed, clothing, or money. Our special aim in visiting the sick and poor is that while we succour them in material things, we strive to raise them from their present state of moral degradation through the announcement of the Saviour's love. Our mission does not work for any church in particular, as we receive orphans of all denominations, and those whom we have the joy to see arrive at the knowledge of the truth we leave in perfect liberty to join any denomination of Christians they may prefer."

The Constantinople Rest.

DEAR SIR,—This Rest has now been opened for over ten years. God has manifested his presence in delivering captives from the bondage of sin and Satan, leading them into His own glorious liberty. Many a sailor looks back to it as to the place where the Lord healed his backslidings and restored comfort to his soul!

The Rest, which consists of a coffee and reading room, is open daily, books and newspapers are provided, while meetings are held in the evening with plenty of hearty singing, and short Gospel addresses. A good many ships remain but a few hours in Constantinople to take in coal, and do not come in port. During the past year over 1,000 of these vessels were visited, and suitable Gospel literature given to the men, which is always eagerly received. The work is quite unsectarian, and is solely supported by voluntary contributions, not being connected with any Society at Home.

Although the strictest economy is practised the funds are very low, in fact at this moment the Rest is absolutely penniless, as many of the friends who used to help us have been taken Home by the Lord, and their empty places have not been filled up yet. Major Robert L. Long, the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N., will answer any communications, or tracts and newspapers are best sent by book-post to Miss Green Armytage, The Rest, Constantinople.—Yours faithfully,

A. R. KOOL.

MISS LUCY BOOTH, the leader of the Salvation Army forces in India, is dangerously ill at Nariad, Gujerat.

TO BRAZIL BY WAY OF MADEIRA is an interesting sketch of the work with which the name of the late Dr. Kalley is so honourably associated. There are, surviving Dr. Kalley's efforts, churches in Brazil, unsupported by any society, which greatly need pastors and teachers; and to seek these Mr. James Fanstone, who has for several years laboured in Pernambuco, is now in Great Britain. We trust that the pamphlet, which gives portraits of both these gentlemen, will promote the evangelisation of South America. Copies may be had from the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland in Edinburgh. The hon. treasurer of the work is Mr. Ebenezer Denholm Young, W.S., 52, Braid-road, Edinburgh.

The Lamb in the Throne.

Rev. iv. v.

In John and every godly Hebrew, memory cherished no more joyous or sacred subject than the Glory of God as that had been manifested in Israel. It was to all such, in early days, the utmost revelation of the personality of their own Jehovah, in his administrative activities of grace and righteousness among his people. Alas! sin had driven that glory from Zion, and she had long been, and was now, desolate.

The fair vision of God's Lamb on earth had come and gone—to the world, as sunk in death; to the little flock, ascended into the heavens. Intense and constant must have been their longing to know fully of his reception there, and of his present as of his future glory. Much of these desires had been gratified by the descent of the Holy Spirit, and his following mighty works; but the very successes of the Spirit had exposed that flock the more to the malignity of the world, and thereby intensified their desire that the voice of their own Holy Redeemer might sound through the terrible darkness which was rapidly closing over them.

And now the hour has come when the Church of God is to have this desire abundantly satisfied. Beloved John, a prisoner for Christ in the Isle of Patmos, is in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, when lo! heaven opens, and reveals to his adoring gaze the long-lost, well-known scene of the glory of God. The sapphire throne, as Ezekiel saw it, is there; its holy and merciful Occupant seated under his emerald rainbow as of old, his living creatures once more appear, and the lightnings, thunderings, and voices mingle themselves again with the universal adoration to Him who sits upon the throne.

But to the vision of the glory of God John sees added one altogether new and amazing feature. "Round about the throne were four-and-twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment, and they had on their heads crowns of gold." Blessed proof this, to John and fellow saints, that grace to man reigns with the glory in heaven, if driven from the Temple in Zion; and that godly mourners over the desolation there, who will justify the ways of God, and by faith follow the Glory into heaven, will find there a welcome and a sphere of worship as ample, and vastly more glorious, than was ever found with the twenty-four priestly courses of the earthly sanctuary—find it in spirit now, as assuredly they shall in bodies of glory in the day of God. For in this the vision is prophetic; John now knows that Ezekiel's "likeness of a man upon the throne" has passed into the glorious reality of his risen Lord on the throne of his Father in the heavens; and the fair vision of these twenty-four elders in royal priestly glory was to him a Divine assurance of like glory to all the saints.

As St. John continues to gaze upon the rapturous vision one object of supreme and intense interest arrests his eyes. He "saw in the right hand of Him that sat on the throne A BOOK written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals." The attitude of Him who holds it, and the voice of a strong angel, invite a claimant from heaven or earth to open the book and to loose the seals thereof. Alas! the invitation seems given in vain, and John, in bitter sorrow, "weeps much." Happy John! God multiply such weepers for his Holy Word! His tears were sacred, and an angelic assurance turns his mourning into joy.

God had sent forth into earth his spotless and unblemished Lamb (Amnos), fully equipped and competent to declare the Father to perishing and seeking men. How has He fared? What are his claims to honour and power? Let Him appear, that heaven may know what He has done, and what man has done with Him!

And now, before the throne, before God, stands his Lamb, not now Amnos, but Arnion,* transfigured, even as man has made Him, and even as He made himself for man, and for his God. He stands "as it had been slain," not many years ago, but recently, as newly slain.

The new name, Arnion, marks the depth and intensity of Satanic and human malignity; it marks the endurance and strength of his own obedience even unto death; and it marks the depth whence the righteous love of God proceeds in raising the Lamb to utmost glory. It is his name when He is seen bleeding before the throne (v. 6); and it is equally his name when He, with the Lord God Almighty, constitutes the Temple of the New Jerusalem (xxi. 22).

Edinburgh. G. Graham.

* The Greek word Amnos indicates a "lamb" simply; Arnion, a lambkin, is used constantly in the Apocalypse, and seems intended to emphasise the sacrificial aspect of the lamb.

THE GOSPEL IN ITALY.

Pastor Mariani, of Bari, Italy, has been cheered by remarkable conversions among his people. He is associated with the Evangelical Church of Italy, and writes as follows:—

"One evening while I was preaching Jesus to a large auditory in our chapel, I was delighted to see a man particularly attentive. Since that evening he has never failed to come, Sundays and week days. In talks with him I learned that the word of grace had wrought deeply in his heart. He was a very wicked man, and a complete slave to drunkenness, blasphemy, and lust. No sooner was the change wrought in his heart, than he took steps to give up his sinful practices. The woman with whom he lived sought the same Saviour, and nightly, with the New Testament in hand, he explained the Gospel to her. They were then married, a child which they had abandoned was recovered from a foundling home, and, in happy family life, they witness for Christ, and with encouraging fruit.

"Another man, some time after his conversion, was unable to sleep at night. He remembered that some years previously he defrauded a poor shopkeeper of about twenty francs. In days gone by he felt no remorse, but now he was in deep trouble. He remembered the case of Zaccheus, and exclaimed, 'If I have wrongfully exacted aught of any man, I will restore fourfold.' In fact, having some money in the savings-bank, the next day he took from it a hundred francs, confessed his dishonesty to the shopkeeper, and obliged him to accept that sum in the name of Jesus, who had changed him and given him an invaluable treasure.

"At Brindisi recently, while on an evangelisation tour, I heard a voice in the street crying, 'Down with the Protestant!' I was surprised, because I was known by nobody in the place, and had no special dress that could make me known as a Protestant. I soon perceived that the threat was not addressed to me, but to a poor man almost blind, who was approaching me with a small box, asking to clean my shoes. He was an old acquaintance of mine! He was formerly a man well acquainted with all the prisons of the Puglia, where he lived several years to expiate woundings, murders, and other crimes. About five years ago he lived at Bari, and was well known as a man to be shunned. One evening I saw his frightful countenance among the hearers in our chapel. At first he seemed to laugh to scorn the Word of God, but at last he became more serious, and at the end of the service he went out quickly, so that I had no time to catch him. He attended the next meeting, and afterwards never failed to come to every service.

"I had many and long conversations with him. A complete transformation took place in his whole being; even his countenance became more human. He used often to say: 'I don't recognise myself, and how love has taken the place of hatred in my heart! I have lost all my strength, and feel unable to kill a fly. I was a lion, and am a lamb. I do not understand how Jesus could love such a scoundrel as I am; but it is a fact, and is enough.' Sometime after his conversion he left Bari for another town, and I lost sight of him. Now I was glad to meet him at Brindisi, and as soon as he recognised me he embraced me and wept for joy. I am very delighted to say that he is the one faithful, unwearied, and fearless witness for Jesus that I know in that town. All day long, and wherever he is, he cannot help speaking of Him who transformed his life and saved him. He can scarcely read or write, but every day he holds family worship in his house, and many neighhours join with him. I have said his house, but alas! it is a mistake; it is not a house where he lives with his wife and five children, but rather a cave or den. He is very poor. A dreadful disease lately deprived him of one eye, and the other scarcely permits him to read his Bible. What he earns by cleaning shoes is not sufficient to provide bread for his family, yet he is happy and always cheerful in the Lord, repeating and relying on the promise, 'The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want!' I could relate many other facts, but for the present these are surely enough to illustrate that the Gospel of Christ 'is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.'"

We are sorry to learn that in consequence of the loss of many subscribers by death, the income of the Evangelical Church of Italy has been much reduced, whilst at the same time the work is continually growing. According to the last report, there are twenty-five churches, thirty-five stations, 102 places visited regularly by nineteen ministers and eleven evangelists

THE GOSPEL BY LIMELIGHT.

Mr. William Thomson, jun., has lately conducted a three weeks' mission in Ayr. The meetings on Sabbath nights were held in the Town Hall, and the week night meetings in the new Union Hall. Bunyan's Pilgrim, the Paschal Lamb, &c., formed the basis of most effective and earnest Gospel illustration and preaching. Between two and three hundred were specially dealt with during the mission, many of whom gave every evidence of conversion.

Mr. Thomson also conducted Bible readings daily in the Ayr Free Church Hall, which proved a means of great blessing to those who attended. These Bible readings were mainly on the lines of holiness teaching, and were marked by a very intimate acquaintance with and forcible application of the Word of God. G.

Mr. Henry Thorne in Manchester.

Mr. Thorne has held services for ten days in the Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester. He was suffering much from weakness of body and heavy domestic affliction, but the strength of the Lord was made perfect in weakness, and the meetings had great blessing. At the Praise Meeting on the last evening many testified that they had found salvation during the Mission. A number of the inmates of the Boys' Refuge declared they had found the Saviour.

Since the mission closed Mr. Thorne has had to part from his dear wife, who through much suffering has been called to her everlasting reward.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The offices of the Open-air Mission have been removed from 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, to 11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C. The West London Auxiliary of the Mission celebrated its anniversary on Monday, December 12, when a large company of workers and friends gathered at Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road. Mr. R. C. Hart-Dyke presided, and warmly advocated the cause of the mission. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Herbert Trotman and Mr. Frank Cockrem, of the parent society. A stirring missionary appeal was made by a lady member of the North Africa Mission.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION, EAST.—Rev. Peter Thompson has issued a deeply interesting "Record of Work," with facts and incidents, for the past year. The agencies of the mission are very varied, and not only tell of a widespread need, but also of praiseworthy devotion on the part of many workers. An important notice is inserted, addressed to "intended candidates for the ministry and other young men wishing to prepare for mission work." Therein it is announced that "arrangements have been made to receive such young men into residence on moderate terms. They will be assisted in the prosecution of their theological and literary studies, and will have opportunities of engaging in the work of the mission. The educational department will be under the direction of Mr. Henry Jefferson, M.A. (Lond.). Arrangements for residence, with partial or full board, at a reasonable charge, are also made with young men who are engaged in business in the City, and who are willing to spend Sundays and any evenings in the week in the work of the mission. For further particulars apply to the secretary, 242, Cable-street, London, E.

FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION.

SAVING THE LADS.

WHAT ABOUT THE GIRLS?

THEIR CASE is far more desperate. TEMPTATION is GREATER. Their fall more terrible. Their Reclamation all but impossible.

Hundreds of Friendless Girls whose Factory wage is insufficient resort to Street Hawking—alas, too many swell the ranks of the lost.

WHY NOT HELP THEM IN TIME? PREVENTION IS EASIER THAN CURE. THEY ARE CAPABLE OF BEING MADE THE BEST OF SERVANTS.

THE FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION

Has already Received, Trained, and Placed Out over

NINE HUNDRED SUCH GIRLS.

The Streets are now full of poor tempted Girls, before whom is that fatal step from which there is no return. WHY NOT OPEN TO THEM THE DOOR OF REFUGE, SAFETY, AND USEFULNESS.

OUR WORK is LIMITED ONLY by LACK of FUNDS.

SAVE THE GIRLS. THEY ARE THE WEAKEST, MOST SORELY TEMPTED, MOST DESPISED WHEN LOST, MOST FRUITFUL EITHER FOR GOOD OR EVIL.

WHAT HOPE IS THERE FOR A FRIENDLESS GIRL LEFT IN THE STREETS ALONE AT NIGHT IN WINTER?

Dear Friends

I most earnestly solicit your help on behalf of the young children under my care and the poor mothers who so bravely fight life's battle against such fearful odds, and I hope that you will by your generous aid enable me to continue this work of mercy, as any withdrawal of help at this season would inflict much suffering; but I trust that I shall not so close my twenty-second year of labour which has brightened so many lives that are cast amid the shadows

Yours in the service of the helpless,

IMPORTANT LETTER FROM MR. D. L. MOODY.

IRELAND & THE WORD OF GOD.

"From my knowledge of the aims and work of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland, I am persuaded it deserves the sympathy and support of all the true friends of Ireland and the Gospel. To circulate the Word of God and good books among the people is probably the most important service that could be rendered to the country.

"It is a matter of rejoicing that members of the various Evangelical Churches are co-operating in this good work. Irish Protestants need to unite more than they have done if they are to bring Ireland to the feet of Jesus. The constitution of this Society affords a fine basis for such united action.

"In England and Scotland and America there must be many Christians who are concerned about a country whose sins and sorrows have occupied so large share of public attention during recent years. In supporting this agency all may feel satisfied that they are helping to prosecute a grand aggressive work in a way specially adapted to the circumstances of the country.

"Colportage has been owned and blessed of God in many lands, and the reports of this Society show He is blessing it in Ireland also. Those who are carrying on this work have my best wishes for their success, and my prayer is that they may find themselves encouraged to take a forward step in this patriotic and blessed mission.

The Directors earnestly appeal for help to carry on this important work which God has placed in their hands. The Hon. Treasurer is Sir WILLIAM QUARTUS EWART, Bart., Belfast, by whom contributions will be gladly received, or at the office of The Christian.

DUBLIN PRISON-GATE MISSION,

22, BLACKHALL PLACE.

As Christmas approaches, with its happy gatherings, will those who enjoy God's gifts of home and friends aid in affording shelter to those who are without these blessings?

We plead for more than one hundred women, daily working steadily at the Mission, and for those also who come seeking help each day from the Prison-Gate.

Since the Mission (one of the first fruits of D. L. Moody's visit to this city in 1874) was opened upwards of 8,000 women and girls have been received.

To all this has meant food, warmth, and cheer, sisterly help, counsel, and compassion.

To a very large proportion it has proved the stepping-stone to earning an honest livelihood, to self-respect, and to happiness.

To many the Mission has been the means of entrance into the Kingdom of God.

Little children, young girls, reckless, despairing women have here been sheltered, comforted, and blessed, and have had their lives lifted from the darkness of sin and misery into the sunlight of the love of God.

The earnings of the women supply nearly two-thirds of the total cost of the Mission. Shall Christian love not supply the lacking third to keep this open door?

The committee need £500 to close this year's accounts.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the following:—

Mrs. M. EUSTACE, Clonbrone, Temple-road; Mrs. EDMUNDSON, Allermuir, Fox-rock; Mrs. SIBTHORPE, 75, Lower Baggot-street.	Hon. Secs.
Mr. WM. HAYES, 12, Grafton-street; Mr. F. W. FISHER, 24, Anglesea-street.	Hon. Treasurers.

For the Young.

OUR YOUNG "HELPERS."

A GREAT army they stand to-day—11,500 strong! Who are they? and what are they doing? I must try to answer both your questions very shortly and very simply.

Our Young Helpers are a union of boys and girls who are engaged in H—oly work and H—appy work; for they are banded into a League which has the love of their poorer brothers and sisters for each link of its long and golden chain, and the love of the Lord Jesus as the jewel-gemmed clasp that binds them all together in their united, sweet, and Christ-blessed labour. To work for Jesus in the person of one of the least of his sick and suffering little ones is sure to be happy work; it brings us so much nearer to Himself, and to the likeness of Him who "went about doing good," that it cannot fail to be holy work, too.

It is E—very child's work! None are too young and weak to do something. We have little children in Dr. Barnardo's Homes, only a few months old, needing love, care, and comfort—little creatures whose short lives have been long lives of weariness, ill-usage, and pain. None of our well-loved, well-cared-for boys or girls are too young to be linked in heart and service, and self-denial to a sadder life. Their joys and luxuries shared will be joys and luxuries sweetened a thousand-fold.

It is L—ovely work. Ask the Companions of our Young Helpers' League what they think about their past year of labour for the unlovely and unloved waif children of our towns, cities, and villages. Ask them if they find it hard and disagreeable work to collect money, to make useful garments, to interest others, to attend the quarterly meetings of the Habitations found in their neighbourhood? They will say, as a Companion said the other day, "I think it is all lovely!" For the sunshine of Christ's love gilds every duty, every self-denial, every long hem and seam, and darn. With his fresh, sweet love filling our hearts and flowing out, for his sake, to the helpless lambs of his little flock, nothing seems hard and all seems easy!

It is P—ressing work. This part of the "King's business requireth haste." Every day the need seems greater; every week fifty to sixty miserable, destitute children knock with trembling hand at the "ever-open doors" and cry "Save us!" Thousands more unite in one sad wail of want this Christmas season, and their hungerful faces, poorly-clad forms, and chilled, pinched look plead mutely, yet powerfully, for the supply of their pressing needs.

It is E—veryday work, just what a child can do. Our simple League prayer, offered each day by sweet baby lips; a little loving thought of needy brothers and sisters that checks the outlay of money on self; a little labour cheerfully given in the many ways our magazine suggests; an effort to arouse the interest of school-mate or friend, just "here a little and there a little," and the work goes on. Our young helpers are not asked to make supreme efforts at self-denial in support of our cause, but day by day to pray or work as "God giveth ability."

And it is very R—eal work. Thank God for that! The dear children do make an effort, and work with might and main. From the wee laddie of six who picked up acorns until his small fingers were sore and stiff, and his little back "ached all night" that he might earn a shilling for his collecting card, to the school-girl of seventeen, who writes, "I had saved this 10s. to spend on myself at Christmas time, but Jesus must have it now for his needy ones," they all do real work. They are all in earnest—more so than we older people—in their sweet and simple way.

No wonder that we call it S—hining work, for oh! those who do Christlike work have a Christlike halo round them. Selfishness always means shadows—in heart and life. Self-sacrifice brings brightness and joy of soul. Our hearts may be so self-centred that by and by our natures shrivel up! We grow like withered apples, nothing but wrinkles, dryness, and core! And we are never satisfied. Selfishness cannot satisfy. But a sweet unselfish thoughtfulness for others makes us shine all over—in face, heart, soul, and spirit. Now who will take up this Happy, Every child's, Loving, Pressing, Everyday, Real, and Shining Work? Who will join our Band? Who will sign the little pink application for membership enclosed in last week's CHRISTIAN, and become Companions of our great and growing League?

EVA TRAVERS EVERED POOLE.

LUGALAMA

AND HIS BROTHER MARTYRS OF THE UGANDA MISSION.

In the land of far Uganda,
Near the springs of ancient Nile,
Where the rays of tropic sunlight
On the blue Nyanza smile.

There are scenes of tranquil beauty
Where the wavelets kiss the shore,
And their ripples softly murmur
Lays of peace for evermore.

And the silvery leafy plantain
Waves and rustles in the breeze,
While all Nature sweetly whispers
How she seeketh man to please.

Yet where all so fair is seeming
I behold a vale of gloom;
Where the swampy waters fester
Round a spot of death and doom:

Where upon a day of darkness
Came a band of evil men,
With a captive youthful trio
To this lone and silent glen.

These were children of King Jesus;
Servants of the Crucified;
"Isa" was their only Saviour,
And they scorned their faith to hide.

For to them had come the tidings
From a land beyond the sea,
Of that merciful Redeemer;
And in Him their souls were free.

But the senseless, cruel tyrant
Had decreed that they must die
In that distant gloomy valley
Where the lifeless waters lie.

"Daily, daily sing His praises!"
This their death-song rose on high,
As they neared that darksome valley,
While the angels hovered by.

Fiercely death achieved its triumph.
Fiendish weapons, fiery flame
Hushed those voices; but the Saviour
Sealed their tribute to his Name.

And their praises ring for ever
In his home of light and love,
While their story beckons others
To the kingdom of his love.

Gentle, loving Lugalama,
Youngest of the martyr-three,
How thy teacher's piercèd spirit
Mourned in anguish over thee!

Lovingly has He pourtrayed thee,
Once his tender joy and pride;
He has told the world the story
How his Lugalama died.

Let the woes of Lugalama,
And of all the martyred band,
On the shores of the Nyanza
Call to this our favoured land:

"Hasten, O our Christian brothers,
Sons of England—great and free;
Rest not till our fair Uganda Shares your light and liberty."

EMILY SYMONS.

A YOUNG MALAGASY SLAVE.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers probably know that domestic slavery still prevails among the Christianised Hovas of Madagascar. In heathen days, the only recompense hoped for by the unpaid warriors who followed their king, in his expeditions against other tribes, was to be found in the number of captives each could secure from the sacked houses and villages. These became the mothers and grandmothers of the present slave population in the Hova Highlands.

They are somewhat darker than the ruling race, who call them the black people, and themselves whites—a distinction more imaginary than real. However, slaves have shared in the blessings the Gospel has brought to Madagascar, many being scholars in the Sabbath schools, and a few in the day schools connected with Christian churches; and of those brought to Christ in the recent revivals, both in Antananarivo and in other towns and villages of the central province, not a few slaves are now rejoicing in their Saviour's love.

The case of one of these young Christian slaves I desire, with your kind permission, to bring before your readers, especially those interested in native evangelists. This youth, for years a scholar in one of our mission schools, and of late assistant teacher in it, is now rejoicing in Christ as his Saviour, and longs to make Him known to others. He is already an approved local preacher, and is willing to go wherever the Lord may have need of him. He would be eligible in every way for admission to the London Missionary Society's college in Antananarivo, where he would be trained for work as an evangelist or missionary to some of the yet unreached heathen tribes. But the one fatal obstacle to his admission is that he is still a SLAVE, the property of another, liable to be sent or retained wherever that other chooses to place him; liable on that other's death, as a piece of heritable property, to be transferred to a new owner without his wishes being consulted. Will you help to redeem this Christian youth from bondage, that he may receive further training, and be sent out to preach the Gospel to those who are still in darkness and the shadow of death? Twenty pounds would probably suffice to secure his freedom. I will gladly furnish the young preacher's name and address with other particulars, to any friends who may address me, care of the London Missionary Society, 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

(MRS.) A. P. PEILL.

[Mrs. Peill is a relative of mine. Her husband, herself, and their five young sons, are now at home on furlough. This young slave was the fruit of special meetings held by Mr. Peill in October last. My little grandchildren will be happy to unite with other young friends in contributing to his redemption from slavery. R. C. MORGAN.]

BRITISH BOYS IN CANADA.

SIR,—Mr. A. H. Brace, representing Mr. J. Fegan in Canada, has returned from an extensive tour throughout the country—what may be termed his annual "surprise visit" amongst the boys. These range in age from ten to twenty-two, and were found engaged in all kinds of farm work. One lad, grown to be a fine young man, was found to be foreman of the carriage painting department in a firm with which he has been engaged for several years. The homes visited are almost without exception of a most satisfactory character—clean and comfortable, with an abundance of everything, and a healthy moral atmosphere,

Many of these young fellows are earnest Christians, and Mr. Brace, on his visits, always sees whether they are being introduced to the fellowship of the neigbouring Churches.

Special inquiries were made respecting the younger boys and their attendance at day school, and it was found that many of these are making decided and gratifying progress. Four are working for a "third certificate," which will qualify them to teach in the public schools of Ontario.

Not the least interesting part of Mr. Brace's work is his correspondence with these boys, which, with a family of nine hundred, must of necessity be large. One or two specimens will serve to show how happy and thoroughly at home these boys are on their farms:—

"Dear Sir,—I like this place; I make myself quite at home, and they are very kind to me. I want to send my mother 5dols. or 6dols., because my father is sick and not able to work, so I ask you what I am to do. Take the money and send it for me. I promised my mother that I would send her all I could to help her, because there are eight besides themselves and me.

"Yours truly, J. W. P."

"Dear Sir,—I have a very kind mistress and boss. I am getting along nicely and learning fast. I intend to make this my home, and a good home it is for any boy. I am used just like one of their family. I am allowed to do anything I like in the house, and play the organ on Sunday. We have a fine brick house, which is finely furnished.

"I would have written before, but I was busy at work. The mistress keeps accounts of the books, and does all the writing. I always go to the post-office myself and get the letters. I will write again bfore long. "Yours truly, W. B."

It is a very pleasing duty to send five and ten dollars frequently to widowed mothers from loving anxious young hearts who take such delight in doing something towards relieving the poverty and want they themselves know so much about from their own bitter experience.

Yours, on behalf of the Canadian Council,
H. P. DWIGHT,
President G.N.W. Telegraph Co.

CHRISTMAS ECHOES.

To us belongs the Christmas joy
Which Christ alone can give;
For if we are alive in Him,
He in our life must live.

And as of old that guiding star
Led to where Jesus lay;
So shall his light still lead us, till
Night breaks in endless day.

Jesus, may that manger bed,
Where Thou didst lie for me,
The shame, the cross, thy risen life,
Draw all my heart to Thee!

C. BUTLER STONEY.

Merrily rang the Yuletide bells,
And merrily rang the hall,
When grandfather sat at his Christmas feast,
In the midst of his children all;
How blue were the skies, and how white the snow,
At Christmas forty years ago!

Lovingly rang the Yuletide bells
To the bridegroom and the bride,
When the love of heaven and the love of earth,
To the lovers, side by side,
Lit the stream of life with its rosiest glow,
At Christmas twenty years ago.

Solemnly rang the Yuletide bells
To the parents bowed with care,
Worn with the struggle from year to year,
Yet the Christmas table bare:
December was dark with a deepening woe,
At Christmas seven years ago.

Drearily ring the Yuletide bells
To those by the fireless hearth,
Who wait to be driven from their home of youth,
With no rest for their feet on earth;
The clouds grow blacker, but God sees through,
At Christmas eighteen-ninety-two.

J. K.

Hail the breaking of the dawn,
Bright with gleams of fadeless morn!
To the East we turn our eyes;
'Tis from hence its beams arise.

In a manger, mean and low,
We behold its golden glow,
Where the Sun of Love Divine
Through an infant form doth shine.

Cradled on a mother's breast,
He in human mould doth rest;
In her gentle arms He lies,
Soothed by tender lullabys.

Seraph bands his praises sing,
Magi costly offerings bring;
To our God we're reconciled,
He in Christ on us has smiled.

Unto us a Son is given,
Peace on earth and joy in heaven;
Hail the heavenly sunrise bright,
God in Man the world's True Light.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

The year is waning fast; but ere it flies
A genial ray lights up the wintry skies;
And well-known cheery wishes greet the ear—
"A joyous Christmas, and a glad New Year!"

Yea, joy to all has come, for Christ the Lord
Was born fresh life and comfort to afford;
And chose his lot in poverty and pain
That we his perfect sympathy should gain.

So through the coming year our Christmas note
Of praise and joy to Him shall onward float,
And mingle with the sadder strains of life,
Resounding o'er the discord and the strife.

And should we meet with disappointment keen,
Fresh cause for joy may yet by faith be seen;
For God has planned "some better thing" to give;
Let us then trust Him fully while we live.

What if "a little while" we still must wait
Till he our tangled knotted threads makes straight!
"We are his workmanship," and He alone
Can understand the treatment of his own.

And thus, whate'er the untried Future bring,
Our hearts, divinely tuned, may ever sing,
And practise for the heavenly choir above,
Where all shall praise and bless the GOD OF LOVE.

ELLEN MINTON-SENHOUSE.

Never was so bright a morning
For this sorrow-stricken earth;
Never dawned a day so joyful
As the day of Jesu's birth.

Countless hosts of white-robed seraphs
Circle in the Eastern sky,
Chanting in celestial chorus—
"Glory be to God on high."

Wave on wave of sound melodious
Rise and fall in accents clear:
Lost in hazy dreams of wonder,
Foolish man has closed his ear.

Why, O listening world of nature,
Did ye not your silence break,
Calling him in voice of thunder
From his slumber to awake?

Surely had he caught the echo
Of that melody divine,
Sent it ringing through the ages,
With its messages benign,

Human souls had tuned their voices,
Loud prolonged the joyful strain,
Till in one harmonious chorus
Earth and heaven had met again.

MARY A. HOLLAND.

Set in the midnight sky
Of the far East,
Moving within its deep tranquillity
As wild sea-birds rest
On the dark ocean's breast,
Amid earth's memories is thine not least,
O Star of Bethlehem!

Pure as a wind-swept flower
Born with the dawn,
To hold its frail life till the evening hour
Hushes all the wood;
As the last thought of God,
Fresh from his hand Thou camest forth alone,
O Star of Bethlehem!

'Mid yonder circling host
No orbit thine,
No stately satellite thy pathway crossed;
But earth never wore
By sea or shore,
And heaven never bore, light so divine,
O Star of Bethlehem!

Holy thy vigil o'er
The cradled Christ,
Lone watcher of that first incarnate hour;
While with high grace
The near light of his face
Betokened thee his fair evangelist,
O Star of Bethlehem!

Herald of peace to be,
Far from our ken
Thy home is found. Back to thy native sky,
While wakening earth
Greeted one lowly birth,
What angel of the dawn bore thee again,
O Star of Bethlehem?

J. E. W. JOHNSTON.

Lo, erst in the desolate wilderness sighing,
Affrighted and ready to perish,
From foes ever active and terrible, flying
Without expectation to cherish:
To-day appears heaven unveil'd to our view,
The Kingdom of Christ evermore,
So perfectly beautiful, peaceful, and new:
Lift up hallow'd eyes and adore.

Hark! hark to the voice of a ravishing song—
Canst hear what the angels are saying?
For rescue of captives from "murder and wrong,"
They "Glory to God" are conveying—
"Peace,"—past understanding—to wisdom unknown—
"On earth, and good will toward men,"
Salvation to all who now honour and own
The Lamb that for sinners was slain.

Shall joy be in heaven, and thou not the cause,
When highways and hedges bring glory?
Haste! hesitate not, danger lurks in a pause,
And this is God's soul-saving story:
For you—"whosoever," whatever their sin,
For them 'tis "behold" ye, and "live";
Nor clinging to merit nor guilt, enter in
And hear Divine love—"I forgive."

Stript, wounded, alone, broken-hearted, believe,
He gave his dear Son to deliver
His creature from death, life in Him to receive Aloud, praise our bountiful Giver—
The reconciled Father; to you doth He call;
Rejoice in the gift of his love—
Eternal redemption from sin's cruel thrall,
To fulness of freedom above.

His angels, on eager wing, over your head,
Commissioned by infinite power
For blessing, they linger, yet long to descend
As the rain and the dew on each flower,
To witness of "durable riches" in Him,
Who now from the throne of his grace
With gladness fills empty cups full to the brim,
While love lights his glorified face.

CHARLES ELLIS.

Born of woman, Lord of Glory!
Born to die, from sin to save!
God incarnate—wondrous story—
Conquering Satan and the grave.

Jesus, sole Propitiation!
Pleading ever on the throne;
Source and Giver of salvation,
Thee we trust in, Thee alone.

Conquering Death, to Heaven ascending,
Thee our ransomed souls adore!
Thine is mercy never ending,
Thine be glory evermore!

NEWMAN HALL.

WAITING FOR MR. MOODY.

WE make no apology for publishing the following private letter received last week from Mr. Sankey. Many a sympathetic thought must have gone out towards Mrs. Moody, Mr. Sankey, and other friends, during those anxious days of waiting: their joy and thankfulness will now be in proportion to the sorrowful suspense:—

Dear Friends,—We are all filled with thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for the great deliverance which He hath wrought, in answer to prayer, in saving the lives of our beloved friends, Mr. Moody and his son, together with all who were with them, in the ill-fated steamer the Spree. Mrs. Moody has been with us here in Brooklyn for the last seven days awaiting the arrival of her husband; and as day after day rolled away without bringing any word from the vessel, although several large steamers came into port, having seen nothing of the Spree, the strain became very trying to us all, and especially to Mrs. Moody.

Dr. Cuyler, Mr. McWilliam, and other friends, called several times a day with words of hope and encouragement, but after four days' suspense and anxiety, and no word coming from the over-due steamer, Mrs. Moody became almost prostrate under the suspense. But at last we heard the joyful news that the Spree was still afloat, and that she was being towed back into Queenstown Harbour.

However, not until to-day had we any idea of the fearful trial and danger through which they were passing. All the New York papers have had long accounts of the narrow escape, and much emphasis has been put upon the manifest answer to prayer upon the part of those assembled, in what will now be remembered as the most remarkable prayer-meeting ever conducted by Mr. Moody. An hour after the people landed at Queenstown I received the following cable despatch, which caused great rejoicing and thanksgiving in our home, you may be sure:—"Sankey, Brooklyn. Safe. Praise God.—Moody."

We are now awaiting the arrival of the Etruria, as we see by the despatches from Queenstown that Mr. Moody, and others, have already sailed on that steamer.

Yours truly, IRA D. SANKEY.

Brooklyn, N.Y., December 5.

A DEPUTY TAHSILDAR.—The Christian Patriot describes the baptism of Mr. Koragappa and his family by the German missionaries at Karkal, South Canara. His father received instruction from Dr. Mœgling more than forty years ago. The new convert has had many difficulties to contend with; but he has surmounted them all, and he and his family (eight in all) were recently admitted by Rev. Mr. Hartmann into church fellowship.

THE LATE REV. CHARLES GRAHAM,

AVENUE ROAD CHURCH, SHEPHERD'S BUSH.

IT must always be a bond of union between England and Ireland, on the part of the Christ-loving portion of the population, that the Emerald Isle has furnished the Church of God with many eminent servants of the Lord Jesus, widely known and valued alike for their gifts and graces. The subject of this sketch was an Irishman, having been born at Omagh, county Tyrone, on December 8, 1817. His father was an officer in the army, and distinguished himself greatly under Lord Mountjoy in connection with the rebellion of 1798. His mother's maiden name was Anne Hunter, a devoted Christian of exemplary character; and it was by her influence and prayers he was led to the Saviour when quite a boy. He early developed a great fondness for study, with facility in acquiring knowledge. His mental endowments were of a high order, and he speedily became one of the most proficient pupils of Abbey Hall College, Omagh, where his education was largely obtained.

His parents intended him for the ministry of the Established Church, and arranged for his entrance upon a special course of preparation for it, but God ordained it otherwise. Mr. Graham was characterised by firmness of belief and much independence of thought, so that his convictions were always deep and strong; and the habit of judging for himself in the light of truth was early formed. This led him, on looking into the Thirty-nine Articles, and other points he had to consider, to decide that he could not honestly subscribe to them. He felt compelled, therefore, to sever himself from the Establishment, both as to its membership and ministry. Much to the vexation of his parents and friends, he joined the Wesleyan connection, and remained with them for some years. During that period the great Irish famine was raging. Our brother, in a genuine spirit of Christian compassion and patriotism, threw all his energies into labouring for the relief of his stricken countrymen. He was thus brought into prominence among Christians of all denominations, and won general confidence and esteem.

About this time he married Miss Anna Maria Brownrigg, youngest daughter of Mr. Henry Brownrigg, of county Waterford, a woman of high intellectual attainments, and one who took the greatest interest in his studies and pursuits, proving a worthy helpmeet to her husband as a servant of Christ. Some years after this he joined the Brethren. For a time he met with them at Waterford. Owing to ill-health he removed to Worcester, then to Kendal, and eventually to London in 1860. Some articles well calculated to give direction to the converts of 1859-62, and to those interested in them, were written for THE REVIVAL in those stirring years.

His first charge in London was Oaklands Chapel, Shepherd's Bush, a Union Church. After much trial of faith, as well as patient and earnest testimony to the truth of God, he was led to resign the pastorate of that church in 1868. He determined to take an entirely undenominational position in his future course. His old friend, the late Mr. Samuel Morley, proposed that he should undertake the charge of an unsectarian mission, offering to assist him liberally in building several chapels in different localities, if he would endeavour to secure for them a ministry under his own guidance, of an undenominational character. After much consideration, he felt bound to decline this offer, and was led, with the assistance of friends interested in the movement, to erect an iron building in Avenue Road, Shepherd's Bush. Here he soon gathered a large congregation, a church being formed on the line of union in Christ as the only centre and ground of fellowship. To this work he consecrated the remainder of his days, refusing every temptation to relinquish his post, although often solicited to leave it for other spheres.

For twenty-four years he laboured for its spiritual edification, diligently and unostentatiously doing the work which the Master had assigned to him. The words of the Apostle in relation to Epaphras and the church at Colosse, "Always labouring fervently in prayer for you," may truly be applied to him and the church he served so long. In his last illness, amid the much weary suffering through which he passed, he said, "I think the only reason God keeps me here so long in painful weakness is that I may pray for my people and for his work." This he did, daily bringing them as individuals and as families before the Lord.

Mr. Graham was frequently engaged in ministering the Word in various parts of the land, and indeed in other lands as well; for his name was associated with the conferences at Aix-les-Bains, Interlaken, and other parts of the Continent. He was a well-known speaker at many of the conventions held in connection with what has been termed the "Higher Christian Life" movement. While powerfully advocating a life of closest walk with God, and of entire surrender to his will, he strongly opposed all claims to sinless perfection in the flesh. His valuable series of papers on this subject, published in our columns in 1881, will be still remembered by many of our readers as singularly full of Scriptural force and discernment.*

Mr. Graham was perhaps more widely known as a student of the Prophetic Word than in any other special line of Biblical inquiry. For many years he held a monthly meeting for prophetic study in the schoolroom of Avenue-road Church. This meeting was attended and greatly valued by many ministers and Christian workers from different parts of London. As leader of this meeting our brother appeared at his best; his scholarly grasp of the original text of Scripture, his careful discrimination, his keen perception, and withal his gentle, loving spirit in reference to those who differed from him, made his presence on these occasions a great delight as well as profit to his brethren. While strictly adhering to what is known as the "Futurist" school of prophetic interpretation, he gave an intensely practical turn to his dissertations on the subject, in no way encouraging speculation or fanciful theories on the themes discussed. His views exerted a powerful influence over his own inner life.

Had his career been devoted to other than spiritual work he would have taken high rank as a classic teacher and metaphysician; his aptitude and love for philosophic research were very great. He was for years a member of the Victoria Institute, and read not a few papers on important subjects before that body; one on "The Tripartite Nature of Man" is still read and spoken of as a striking contribution to metaphysical enquiry. But all his powers were employed for the one object of bearing witness to the truths of revelation: he lived to exalt Christ and to benefit souls. Firm and outspoken as a Protestant, strong in his adhesion to evangelical truth, he was gentle as a child in the spirit by which he was actuated. The meekness and lowliness of the Master largely entered into the whole scope of his bearing and work.

The tenor of his life is well illustrated by some of his dying utterances spoken to the writer during the last week or two of his life. On one occasion he said:—

For fifty-five years I have been preaching and writing; it has been poor work, but, thank God, Christ and his Word have been its basis. What should I do now if my theme had been any other, or my aim to glorify self rather than Him?

I have done with this world entirely; my ministry here is over; a very different service is before me; at first it will be praise, after that as God shall appoint.

Referring to the many inquiries made for him, and the love felt for him, he said:—

I thank God for that, but I have not for a long time allowed my mind to dwell much on fellowship with saints, lest it should take it off Christ. Fellowship with Him has been my chief ambition.

Those who knew him best, can tell how truly this was so. Now that he is gone we can only thank God on every remembrance of him. Such lives as his cannot be rightly estimated on earth. They do not reach the popular eye or ear, but in the coming day of manifestation, when truth alone shall abide, and all things are seen in the light of God, it will be found that the elements of faith, firmness, and fidelity to truth, which so largely entered into his career, are in the sight of God of great price. W. F. G.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

We wander wide through evil years;
Our eyes of faith grow dim;
The child is freshest from God's hand,
And nearest unto Him.

Boys are not to be coddled. The end of life is to make men; the meaning of all events is to mould character.

Children stimulate our finer qualities. They cheat us of weary care; they preach to us, not so much by their lips as by their innocence.

Let us enfold the children in our love. We are the angels of their childhood; they may prove the angels of our age.—W. L. Watkinson.

The faith and trust of childhood are among the most beautiful things we ever get the chance of seeing. It is our own fault if we shut our eyes on them.

Childhood and age come nearer together than manhood and youth. It is the tenderness into which you have grown in old age that makes old age better understand the tender child.

How many fathers see, with a bitterness of spirit that can never be told, their worst vices of character and conduct reproduced and perpetuated in their children.—Dr. Alex. White.

Oh, grudge no man his work, nor ask
To rule by sword or pen;
We women have a nobler task—
The moulding of the men!
—Janet Logie Robertson.

Y.P.S.C.E. RESULTS.—A correspondent, writing from New York, says that many of the churches in that city still feel the effects of the great Convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, which was held there in July. Although coming at a time when church activities are for the most part suspended, the Convention quickened the life of the community, and many a church has received an impetus in the direction of greater endeavour and surer achievement.

Calls from Morocco.

"SOMEONE MUST PAY."

Coming back once again to the work in Morocco, after a summer in England, the needs of this poor land strike me more than ever, and I cannot help writing down something of what I have seen in the three weeks since I returned; may some hearts be touched to give not only out of but according to "their riches" to help on the work in North Africa.

BURNT VILLAGES.

During the late war almost all the villages that nestle amongst the beautiful Angera Hills were, more or less, destroyed by fire by the Sultan's troops. These villages are within a few hours' ride from Tangier; some have already been visited, and we are hoping to visit one each week, as long as funds will allow. We take medicine, clothing, gifts for the children, and sometimes also give food and money; we have, of course, to hire animals. The distress amongst these poor houseless people is great; they are trying to patch up their blackened, roofless huts, but have scarcely any material with which to do so. Not only have they lost their homes, but their clothing and household goods have, in many cases, also been burnt. The rainy season is close at hand, and they have no protection from it. Numbers are ill with fever and smallpox. Had we funds we could do much to help them now in their hour of need, and it is a grand opportunity of showing these Mohammedans the teaching of Jesus Christ practically illustrated in a way they would never forget. As they eagerly gather round us in groups (in a distant village last Wednesday I counted over thirty listening at one time to the glad tidings), we are able to preach the Gospel with our lips, as well as practise it by supplying their needs. Someone must pay if this relief work is to go on. May numbers count it a joy to do so!

Amongst the Moors in the town there is much work to be done.

DAILY THE SICK GATHER to our medical mission. They need medicine, clothing, and food. In every direction houses are open to us to visit, both rich and poor; all need books, and in many we have patients who need constant help. Just now we are visiting, amongst others, an old negress with badly injured hand; she and her husband are very poor, and are so grateful that we charge nothing for our visits and medicine. Last time I went I had a long talk with them about Jesus. They listened so attentively! Would that some in England could have seen the shining, tearful eyes of that old black woman as it dawned upon her mind for the first time that the great God had sent her a Saviour who could take away all sin. Someone must pay so that we may be able to keep up all this visiting and medical work. Just now but in a week or two we hope the doctor will be back, and it will reopen; patients from all parts of Morocco will be asking for admittance; numbers have been healed while with us, and many souls, we believe, born again. Someone must pay if the wards are to be kept full. Night after night into our refuge in the Market-place the poor and homeless are gathered; men who otherwise would be without shelter for the night. Gladly they come into the warm well-lighted room and faithfully, every evening, is the Gospel preached to them: but someone must pay for rent and fuel, or this Christlike work must stop.

OUR HOSPITAL IS CLOSED,

Little children, untaught, uncared for, continually cross our path, we are longing to have a Home for them, and train them up for Jesus. Someone must have the joy of paying for these little ones, or how can we hope to save them?

But the work here does not stop at the Moors; helping hands are being

and in the mission room in the town the Gospel is constantly proclaimed to them. Jewels from among them have already been won for Jesus; two days after my return we gathered on the sea-shore to witness the baptism of another convert, and at a meeting I was at on Monday night it was sweet to hear a Spanish woman leading in prayer. Children are being taught, the sick visited, the poor clothed, the hungry fed, and how hungry some of these poor Spaniards are may be gathered from the fact that many have had to go out in the fields and gather herbs to eat, having no money with which to buy food. Someone must pay, or how can all this help be continued? There are some thousands of in the town, one of our first converts was from among them; they eagerly receive Gospels and tracts, and are frequent patients at our medical missions. But much more needs to be done for them: they want special workers and special help of many kinds. Someone must pay, or they must still be left without a teacher.

Side by side with all these ever-increasing calls for help, with all these blessed possibilities of service for Christ, comes the saddening news from home of shortness of funds, and, as I read the letter, I thought how great a joy friends at home were missing; they might have the privilege of joining in the glorious work of sending the Gospel to these who have never heard, and they are holding back! I thought also of all it would mean of sorrow and darkness should the work languish for lack of funds. The true light has begun to shine in this dark land, and not only here, but all along North Africa rays of light are piercing the awful darkness of Mohammedanism. Friends who love Jesus, help us to fan the blaze into a mighty fire! We want to enlarge and develop the work in all directions; we must go forward, and for this we need more workers amongst Moors, Spaniards, and Jews; we want also the silver and the gold; someone must pay so that the work may be carried on with redoubled power.

Will all who read this come to the help of the Lord? There are a hundred ways of helping when there is a willing heart. Some may have lost their little ones. "They hunger no more, neither thirst any more;" Jesus is caring for them. Could you not care for some of the neglected little ones of Morocco in their place? Someone must pay if North Africa is to be evangelised. Many who cannot go can give; there are some who can do both.

Give thought, give strength, give deeds, give pelf,
Give love, time, prayer, and give thyself.

Christmas morning will soon be dawning. Surely the thought of the great gift God gave us should make us long to make Him some offering, and, as you plan out your Christmas gift to your King, will you remember the millions of North Africa dying without any knowledge of Him

Who came a little child to earth,
Long, long ago?

Someone had to pay for our salvation, and Christ gave Himself!

THE BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION is doing its utmost to alleviate the distress which prevails among the out-of-work and destitute poor. Every Monday a noon-day service is held in the mission room, and at the conclusion some 130 dinners are distributed, consisting of hot soup and bread. The hon. sec. of the mission, Mr. A. Walters (6, The Corridor, Billingsgate Market), writes: "It is pitiable to be compelled to turn away great numbers every week because we cannot, under present conditions, increase our financial responsibility. That men are content to wait patiently for nearly two hours in order to get a little food, is, to our mind, a sufficient proof of their need and of our responsibility to do what we can to meet it. The Gospel is faithfully proclaimed on each occasion by some honoured servant of God, and who shall say what the result of that faithful testimony may be?"

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN

AN ANXIOUS TIME.

Only a few statistics respecting the applicants of 1892 can be given, but they are very suggestive:

898 Young Women and Girls have sought help at the Office. Of these 368 Preventive cases, mostly girls in their teens.

398 Rescue cases.

54 Maternity cases—some of a most painful character.

78 Prison and Police Court rescues.

130 Young Servants have availed themselves of the new Servants' Home.

590 Poor Outcasts have sought and found shelter at the Open-all-Night Refuge.

The Homes have all been kept in full operation during the year by the generous contributions of subscribers and donors.

320,000 (about) FREE MEALS are provided for the Inmates annually.

6,500 ABSOLUTELY FREE LODGINGS have been given this year to young women and girls in this Refuge, with food night and morning.

WHERE DO THEY COME FROM?

Reference to our registers respecting the above shows that while many were gathered from every district of the metropolis, young women and girls have also been received from almost every part of the United Kingdom. Some have come from the North of Scotland, others from the South Coast of England. Ireland, even down to the shores of the Atlantic, has been represented, as well as the East Coast of England and very many of the home shires.

THE MEANS EMPLOYED TO COLLECT THE REQUIRED FUNDS.

In the history of this Institution, now extending over 35 years, travelling deputations have never been employed to hold meetings in the Provinces and collect funds. The means used now are the same as at the beginning. A small Prayer Meeting is held weekly to lay all wants before the Lord, and an Annual Appeal has always been made at this Season of the Year. Faith has been tried and that sometimes severely, as in 1892, but wondrous have been the answers to prayer and the marvellous interpositions. Home after Home has been established and very many thousands have been fed, clothed, and brought under the sound of the Gospel.

THE TIME IS NOW SHORT.

In less than 10 days the year will close, and I do ask those Readers who have not contributed already to send in their gifts without delay, so that there may be no lack.

Donations may be sent, as heretofore, to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., or

Yours faithfully,

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION

Is £500 in debt. Who will help us to remove this burden that we may carry on this much-needed work amongst the 16,000 Cabmen of London?

Smallest contributions thankfully received by the Superintendent, JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.; or by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, office of The Christian.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

FUNDS GREATLY NEEDED to extend the work at this critical period of Ireland's special wants. Irish-speaking Scripture Readers are sent where required, and the work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy. Reports and Occasional Papers to be had free from the Secretary, Capt. J. KEARNEY WHITE. Offices: 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and No. 9, Paternoster-row, London, where Donations may be sent; or to Rev. ALFRED G. WILCOX, 28, Rectory-grove, Clapham, S.W.; JOSEPH LENG, Esq., 29, The Gardens, Peckham Rye, S.E., Hon. Secretaries for London; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE PARIS CITY MISSION

Has for 12 years published Salvation in the capital of France—chiefly to its ouvriers. From house to house, in Mission Halls and in cemeteries, by Bible and Gospel tract distribution, in and out of season, its TEN Missionaries have worked on with proof of blessing. Fourteen of its supporters have recently been called HOME. The work is therefore languishing for want of funds. Who will take their place by casting into this part of our Lord's treasury?

TREASURER—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street.
HON. SECRETARY—J. M. WEYLLAND, 14, Nicoll-road, Harlesden, N.W.

Who will gladly supply printed information.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

GENERAL MISSION WORK. WORK AMONG CHILDREN. PRISONERS' MISSION AND HOME. BOYS' HOMES AND PREVENTIVE WORK. WOMEN'S HOMES AND RESCUE WORK.

The Superintendent is much grieved to say that owing to the great scarcity of donations, the above many-sided work is sorely hampered.

Funds are urgently needed to meet the outlay at the present time.

Who will help us?

Contributions will be most gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Superintendent, Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

The Annual Report is now ready, and will be forwarded free upon application to the Superintendent.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY,

79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT,

LONDON, E.C.

LONG, dark, and dreary evenings for the poor and destitute, with their cold chilling blasts, are once more upon us, calling forth the increased efforts of all Christian philanthropists in seeking to combat with the misery and suffering wrought by sin, poverty, ignorance, and other causes.

Such efforts are nowhere more needed than in seeking the rescue of poor outcast women, or the salvation of girls in danger of becoming so.

During the year the work of this Society has been extended.

1. By the opening of another Home for 21 girls.
2. By the appointment of a fresh female missionary, whose chief work shall be out-of-doors,

Nine Homes are now maintained, including a Maternity Home and a Lock Hospital.

250 girls and young women can be accommodated at the same time.

15,753 have already been helped to a life of virtue and happiness since the Society was established in 1853.

OF THIS NUMBER 548 WERE AIDED LAST YEAR.

This year we have largely exceeded the usual number, 587 having already been benefited in our Homes up to November 28th.

During recent months the receipts have been far below the expenditure, and we are in urgent need of immediate help.

£1,200 wanted before December 31st.

Contributions may be forwarded to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; to the Bankers Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, & Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

C. STUART THORPE.

A DARK OUTLOOK.

The Outlook for the coming Winter is very dark and gloomy, we shall have to face Poverty and Destitution in its most ghastly aspects. To prevent the poor from sinking into utter hopelessness and despair, we Appeal to the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN for Help.

"Can you help me, Mr. Young?"

We have sorrowfully answered "No, we cannot, our funds being quite exhausted."

£250 URGENTLY NEEDED.

Donations may be sent to T. and J. YOUNG, 1B, Vowler-street, Deacon-street, Walworth-road; or to our Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

INSTITUTED 1685.

President—GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq. Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.

Help is very much needed to carry out the usual winter's programme of this society.

First—The support of eight mission halls, all in districts where the destitute and unemployed reside, and where every kind of evangelistic agencies are in daily operation for both old and young.

Second—All-night rescue work for the homeless.

Third—Free meals, over 300 are now fed every week, and the number could be increased to any extent as funds are available.

Fourth—For the support of a Working Girl's Home.

Fifth—For the employment of lone and husbandless women, who are employed three afternoons per week.

Help for any of these objects will be gratefully received by the treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C. By the secretary as under, or the editor of THE CHRISTIAN; articles of clothing, tracts, hospital letters, coal or food tickets are also solicited.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

Temperance Notes

Mr. George Blacklock has conducted a successful temperance mission at Mere, Wilts.

During the last Parliament alone, 12,261 petitions, with 1,421,800 signatures, were presented in favour of Sunday closing.

The Sunday Closing Bill has actually once, and virtually twice, passed the second reading in the House of Commons.

A world's congress of women workers will be held next May, its sessions to extend over a week during the time of "The World's Fair."

The Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission now numbers eleven branches in the various districts of Manchester, two new ones having recently been formed.

In Nottingham a great temperance demonstration was held lately in the Mechanic's Hall. The speakers included Revs. J. S. Balmer, James Travis, Dr. Townsend, of Birmingham, and Dr. Bowman Stephenson.

Prince Oscar Bernadotte, the second son of the King of Sweden, has organised a total abstinence society among the soldiers at Carlscrona, and is himself the president of the Blekinge Province Temperance Union.

Much enthusiasm prevailed in Doncaster recently on the occasion of a visit from Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard, who addressed packed meetings in the Corn Exchange at afternoon and evening meetings.

The Temperance Committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference have passed a resolution declaring that the Wesleyan Church is practically unanimous in desiring total Sunday closing for the whole kingdom.

The saloon keepers in America may well interpret the letters W.C.T.U. to mean "Women continually torment us," for women's work in moral warfare is beginning to tell against those who thrive on the degradation of others.

Five working men, says Mr. Dobbie, met in a public-house, in Glasgow, to clear off their score for ten days' drinking. The total came to some few shillings over £14. These men were in receipt of good wages, and yet their homes were in want, and their families in beggary.

At first (says Rev. R. W. Dobbie) men who go into the liquor trade dislike their business, as one said to me who had the moral courage to clear out, "I could not bear to take money from children in tatters, and women in semi-nakedness, so I left the business, or I would soon have lost any feeling on the matter."

It is understood that the report of the Home Office Committee on habitual drunkards will advise that increased powers should be given for the detention of habitual drunkards, and that the present law should be so amended that a very considerable discretionary power may be placed in the hands of the police magistrates.

At the annual Central Conference of representatives of Poor Law Guardians held at Exeter Hall, many of the delegates laid special emphasis on drunkenness and gambling as being great factors in producing vagrancy. One speaker affirmed that he had never, in the course of his experience, come across a teetotaler applying for admission to a casual ward, or to the workhouse.

The Wakefield shopkeepers and others who have "off" licences seem alarmed at the agitation which is being raised against their trade. That they may present a united front when the struggle comes—as come it will at no distant date—the holders of these licences held a meeting last week, and unanimously resolved to form an "Association for the protection of the legitimate rights of grocers and others in the Wakefield Licensing District."

Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, the White Ribbon missionaries who are travelling round the world, are now in Australia, making a tour of the colonies, visiting the missions which Miss Ackerman has formed for the world's W.C.T.U. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, who has given eight years of her life to pioneer work on a world tour, first prepared the way in Australia for the work, which has been so successfully organised by Miss Ackermann.

Mr. Morley, replying last week to a deputation whose object was to make permanent the Irish Sunday Closing Act, and to secure its extension to the five cities now outside its operation, said in his judgment there had been no question since that of the emancipation of slaves which was a more deeply moral question and which had aroused a more passionate moral enthusiasm. While agreeing with one of the speakers that the present state of things was anomalous and even scandalous, he was not at all sanguine that the Government would be willing to take the matter up as one of their measures. He could, however, promise that a private member would be given all possible facilities by the Government for carrying a bill dealing with the question through Parliament.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

A meeting in support of this Mission was held in the large hall of the Polytechnic, Regent-street, on Wednesday afternoon, December 14. The Zulu Choir and some children from the Mission's Orphanage department sang pleasing pieces during the proceedings.

Mr. F. Yeats Edwards, who took the chair, said that two years' association with the institution had enabled him to witness to the value of its operations. Archdeacon Sinclair said the idea of the society was friendly aid and counsel to all who need them, especially to the young in the ranks of a vast profession which is attended by its own dangers and particular temptations. After a recapitulation of objects and numerous methods of work, the Archdeacon urged increased support of the Mission in order to a large extension of its useful work.

Rev. Dr. Pierson came at short notice to speak in the place of Dr. Pentecost, who was prevented from attending by a serious throat affliction. He said that the temptations and perils incident to the profession made it all the more necessary that Christian influence should be brought to bear upon it. He earnestly hoped that some of the aimless lives and unused wealth of our day might be devoted to this one among the many channels which God had provided for the well-being of the human family.

Rev. Courthope Todd prefaced the collection by introducing a little orphan girl whose reception into the home was made difficult by low funds. The happy faces and bright and healthy appearance of some of the orphanage inmates who were present made a decided impression on the sympathies of the audience. A new Seaside Home is to be opened on Jan. 12 in Hastings, where are the two furnished houses which Miss Baring, sister of the late Bishop of Durham, has placed at the disposal of the committee for an extension of the good work of benefiting the little bodies often sorely overtaxed in a very arduous calling.

London Banks Prayer Union.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the London Banks Prayer Union was held on Tuesday evening, Dec. 13, at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Cornhill. There was a large attendance of members, Mr. F. A. Bevan presiding.

After tea, the chairman gave a very interesting address, which appealed particularly to those present on account of the numerous comparisons made between business life and their own lives, and the vitality of the Union. He mentioned the great relief it was to busy Christian City men to retire on such occasions from the bustle of daily life.

Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice spoke of the need of waiting for the help we ask from God. If we ask and do not wait to take, we are no better off than before. Mr. W. R. Lane followed with a very stirring address, urging any out of Christ to settle the matter that night. Mr. M. Kenchington, one of the honorary secretaries, read the annual report, which showed that much good work is being done by the Union.

The Railway Mission.

In connection with this Mission two great public meetings were held in the Brighton Pavilion on Tuesday, last week. Mr. Nixon (general secretary), in giving a résumé of the work, said that Brighton was one of 350 branches in the United Kingdom. The Countess of Chichester expressed deep sympathy with the work. Miss Gardiner gave an interesting account of the commencement of her work in Hastings, which has resulted in the recently-opened Railway Mission Hall there. No less interesting was Miss Dolby's narrative of work done in the Convalescent Home at Hastings. Mrs. Gates and Miss Tilley also spoke. Brief testimonies were given by various railway delegates.

MR. F. E. SMILEY, of Philadelphia, has been holding special evangelistic services in Nashville (Tenn.) and Vicksburg (Miss.). The churches of various denominations have heartily united in the work, and much interest has been awakened.

SICILY.—The Sailors' Rest and Mission, established at Catania last May, is prospering. Catania used to be a bad part for intemperance and disorder. H.M. Consul, the Protestant pastors, and others testify to a great improvement recently in the conduct of seamen. At this time a new port is opening for a mission, and this will bring up to six the number of the ports in the island of Sicily where we have stations. Above fifty Romanists attended a lecture on Palestine in the Waldensian Church, and listened as attentively as the Protestant portion of the audience.

Stephen Burrowes,
Sailors' Rest, 7, Vico 2nd Piliero, Naples.

LEYSIAN MEDICAL MISSION.

The report of the Leysian Medical Mission and Mrs. Griffith's Mothers' Meetings states that the patients attending the Medical Mission average 270 a week, and that the Gospel services are arousing a real interest in the souls of many. The sisters who visit at their homes know that many are brought to accept the Lord Jesus as their own precious Saviour. In addition to attending twice every week at the Leysian Hall, Dr. S. Griffith, and his assistant, visit many of the patients at their own homes, and, as there is much poverty and suffering, this entails constant expenditure from his private purse.

The women who come to the mothers' meeting average nearly 100, and there is a marked increase in reverence for the Word of God, and a spirit of hearing, and a desire to know Jesus is manifest among them. I have an excellent Bible-woman, who visits regularly the sick and afflicted, and we give her a small sum of money weekly to distribute among the sick. The blankets we lend from October to May are regarded as a great boon, also the maternity bags, with which we generally give a small sum of money. We really know the people we assist, the sympathy they receive in sorrow and sickness is much valued, and the money we distribute, assisted by our kind friends, goes straight to the sick and poor.

Caroline Griffith.

PRAYER AND WORK.

The first annual meeting of the Tract Union for Prayer and Work was recently held in the Religious Tract Society's House. The chair was taken by Mr. Edward Rawlings, treasurer of the society. Rev. J. P. Hobson, editor of the Society's tracts, stated the objects of the Union, and illustrated how these objects were being carried out from letters he had received from members of the Union.

Rev. P. B. Power founded some remarks on the word "Together," and pointed out that in the great harvest sowers and reapers shall rejoice together. Tract distributors are sowers, and often see no fruit themselves, but they, with the reapers, shall rejoice at last. His address, given in his usual animated style, greatly interested the audience.

Rev. F. B. Meyer had also selected the word "Together" as the basis of his address. His "together" linked the worker with God: "We are labourers together with God." He pointed out what an encouraging fact this is to workers, who are often apt to get discouraged at their small success. In referring to the reward which God graciously gives, Mr. Meyer made three points. The reward consists in (1) the smile of Christ; (2) in the presence of those whom we have brought to heaven; and (3) in further service. Mr. Meyer's remarks were calculated to impress upon all present the dignity of Christian work, and the power available by which to do it.

Soldiers' Home, Cairo.

Last January a small soldiers' home was opened in this place. The need of it had long been felt, and Christian soldiers had been asking God for some time to give them such a place to meet in. The work since then has gone on steadily increasing. It has been owned of God in the conversion of many of the men attending.

The Home has lately been moved to a much larger place in the centre of the town. The rent of this building is £100 a year. The house has been taken for a year, believing that the Lord will incline his servants to send the money. Any information about the Home will be given by Miss Ella Logan or Miss Emily Ridout, Pension Tewfik, Cairo.

The Bible Society.

At its last meeting the editorial committee of this society discussed questions affecting between thirty and forty versions and editions. About a third of this number belonged to Africa.

A lady in sending from abroad a voucher that she will raise her own subscription to the society from £2 to £5, and that her fellow-traveller will raise hers from five guineas to ten, adds:—"The more I travel, the more I see what blessed work the Bible Society does, and the more I long and pray for its extension."

A revision of the Kanarese New Testament is being actively prosecuted at present. Ten thousand copies of the new edition will be printed.

A READING AND REST ROOM, in connection with the Brighton branch of the Postal Telegraph Christian Association, has been opened at 94, Queen's-road.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Mr. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, has lately held a young men's mission at Birkenhead, with manifest blessing.

The week of prayer for young men proved unusually fruitful in results in some of the New York branches.

Twelve hundred young men have been enrolled for the first time in the Berlin Association during the present year.

A new building at Derby was recently opened by Mr. George Williams and Mr. H. H. Bemrose, president of the local branch.

At the annual meeting of the Taunton Y.M.C.A., £100 was raised by collection towards the debt on the building, reducing it to £200.

Mr. Ernst A. Hofer, formerly secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of Zurich, has been engaged as secretary of the German branch, New York.

The youths' section of the Aldersgate-street Association will hold their second Industrial Exhibition next week. Prizes will be given to the successful competitors for excellence in the work contributed.

The new premises of the Brockley Y.M.C.A., at 41, Lewisham High-road, have been informally opened for use. The rooms consist of a meeting and lecture-room, a drawing-room, and a reading-room and library.

The students' branch of the New York Y.M.C.A. held lately a reception for missionary volunteers, addressed by Revs. John G. Paton, D.D., Edward Judson, D.D., and others. About fifty prospective medical and ministerial missionaries were present.

A new Association has been formed at Tavistock. At the inaugural meeting, held in the Town Hall, Dr. Hingston presided, and the vicar of the parish and others spoke warmly in support of the Y.M.C.A. Nearly sixty enrolled their names as members.

A social gathering of the members of the Y.M.C.A., Cornhill, London, E.C., was held at their rooms last Thursday evening to meet the members of the Lay Workers' Union of the Church Missionary Society and the Young Men's Missionary Board of the London Missionary Society.

On behalf of the National Council, Messrs. W. H. Mills and W. Hind Smith have paid a visit to Ireland, to reorganise the work of the three district unions of Associations now in existence there, and to provide during the two years' absence of Mr. McCann for the secretarial visitation of the various centres in the country.

The Saffron Walden Association, formed in Sept., 1891, has now about seventy members. The weekly Bible reading has an average attendance of between thirty and forty. A new building is about to be opened, costing £500, and the committee are anxious to raise £70 or £80 in order to enter free from debt. The secretary is Mr. J. R. Long, Y.M.C.A., Saffron Walden.

The Cork Association give, in their new report, the word "progress" as characteristic of the whole; and, indeed, the past year has witnessed much progress, not only in the way of a new building, of which Mr. Moody laid the foundation-stone in September last, but also in the addition of seventy-eight to the membership, and in great blessing granted on the special evangelistic work and the more regular Bible and other classes.

The Fulham and South Kensington Y.M.C.A., and a number of the local churches, have arranged to hold a mission for seventeen days (Jan. 14 to Jan. 30) in the largest place of worship in Fulham. The mission will be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. The Fulham Association has excellent premises in the main Fulham-road, and, in addition to the regular religious work, provides boarding accommodation for fourteen young men.

The annual meeting of the Hammersmith Y.M.C.A. was well attended. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and amongst the speakers were Revs. F. Baker, H. Dening, A. R. Shrewsbury, and others. The report shows steady progress on evangelistic lines. The Bible classes (Sunday and Wednesday) have been a marked feature of the operations, while the junior section is doing good service. There is evidence that a real work is being done in this busy suburb. The committee are appealing for a thousand annual subscriptions of 2s. 6d. each for the maintenance of the Association.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the Wimbledon Association was lately held at the Lecture Hall, Lord Kinnaird presiding. The secretary (Mr. H. G. Lomer) read the report for the year, stating that the Association had been wonderfully blessed, many young men having been brought to the Lord Jesus Christ through its instrumentality. Among other agencies he specially mentioned the Sunday morning prayer-meeting, with an average attendance of twenty-seven, and the junior Bible-class, which during the past nine months had risen from two to twenty-five. The gymnasium has now nearly fifty members, and it has been decided to have a course of St. John Ambulance lectures.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

The Brooklyn Y.W.C.A. has lately opened a very fine building, given by a gentleman in memory of his departed wife. An endowment fund has also been raised of £20,000 for the maintenance of the work.

Mrs. W. Boyd Carpenter, wife of the Bishop of Ripon, in opening on Friday week a new Y.W.C.A. institute and boarding-house at Harrogate, dwelt upon the manifold advantages of institutions of this character, and emphasised the good work and homely features connected therewith. Apart from its being an institute, it was also a boarding-house for young women desiring rest and change of air. It was her earnest hope that it would fulfil all the ends which were intended by the management, and be a source of lasting good.

OXFORD NOTES.

A meeting was held last week in the hall of Keble College in aid of the Church of England Waifs and Strays Society, when Rev. J. W. Goddard, one of the London secretaries, spoke. The Oxford branch is doing good service both for Oxford children and also for the central society.

One of the poorest parishes in Oxford, and yet one of the best worked, is Holy Trinity, where Rev. G. C. Bowring and a band of helpers are manfully "holding the fort" for Christ. The recent Sunday-school anniversary had an encouraging report, and showed the valuable work done during the year.

The president of the Oxford Y.M.C.A., Mr. Souttar, has lately returned from a tour in America, and has received a hearty welcome home from the association, and especially from the P.S.A., of which he is the valued president. This class continues to increase and flourish amid tokens of definite blessing.

Mr. T. Dixon Rutherford, M.A., of Mansfield College, has accepted the unanimous call from Abney Church, Stoke Newington, to succeed Rev. W. Spensley, who has removed to Sunderland.

Mr. MacInnes, assistant hon. sec. at Exeter Hall, was here last week with a view to encourage Oxford men to work for the Y.M.C.A.'s of their own towns during vacations. There is good reason to believe that this attempt will meet with success.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

There are at present 20,000 navvies working in Scotland, and among these seven missionaries carry on Gospel work.

Rev. James Wark, who for some time past has ably assisted Dr. Robson, of Inverness, has been ordained to the pastorate of the U.P. Church, Banchory.

For a recent vacancy in an Established Church pulpit there were 111 applicants. It is stated that there are 300 Established Church ministers without charge.

In February, Dr. Pierson will deliver his Duff Missionary Lectures in Edinburgh. Subject: "A Century of Modern Missions."

There are about 180 colporteurs in Scotland working in connection with the Religious Tract and Book Society; it is proposed to establish twenty new agencies.

A strong condemnation of the "bothy" system of housing agricultural labourers in Fifeshire was uttered last week by Mr. Pringle, Labour Commissioner.

Mr. John Paten, widely known as a powerful temperance advocate, died at Barrhead last week.

Principal Fairbairn is the Gifford lecturer on Natural Theology this year at Aberdeen.

The Slum sisters of the Salvation Army are doing noble work at Dundee.

Rev. John McNeill, assisted by Mr. Burke, continued his Gospel mission in Edinburgh throughout last week, giving very telling addresses to goodly gatherings in the Free Assembly Hall and the Corn Exchange. Mr. Burke sang some solos at the Carrubbers Close meeting on Saturday evening.

CHELSEA PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE HOMES.—The sixth annual report of these homes gives many touching cases, showing how homeless wayward girls have been helped in the moment of need, or saved from the saddest of lives. The number received and dealt with during the year has been 201, and the results have been remarkably cheering. The whole work is carried on in an undenominational spirit, and is well worthy of sympathetic aid. The hon. sec. is Mr. S. E. Moorcroft, The Homes, 168, King's-road, Chelsea, S.W.

IRISH NOTES.

Rev. H. F. Martin, rector of Killeshandra, has been elected by the Board of Trinity College, Dublin, Donnellan lecturer for next year, and has chosen as his subject, "The place of the Psalter in the development of the spiritual life."

A Presbyterian Church House is proposed for Belfast, which would be a rallying point for Presbyterians visiting the city.

A Gospel mission has been held in St. Luke's Church, Dublin, by Rev. F. W. Gason, formerly rector of St. Thomas's.

A conference of branch secretaries of International Bible Reading Associations, which aim at encouraging the devotional reading and study of the Bible, was held in Belfast on Monday week, where there are now thirty-seven branches and 3,500 members.

A Gospel temperance mission has been held in Antrim, and as the result it has been resolved to form a central organisation for the purpose of considering in what way the evils of intemperance can best be lessened in the town.

A gross instance of priestly intolerance has taken place at Sligo. A Protestant gentleman has been written to by a Roman Catholic priest, warning him to put away his servant, who had become a Protestant, on pain of being publicly denounced in the Roman Catholic chapel next Sunday. This gentleman's house has since been fired into at night.

Dr. R. J. Gordon has been accepted by the Presbyterian Board of Missions as a medical missionary, and will proceed to the foreign field in due course.

As the result of Mr. Matthew Burnett's labours in Belfast last week, 550 Gospel temperance pledges were taken.

Mr. G. H. Agnew writes to us from Inhambane, S.E. Africa:—

This place, Inhambane, is full of a people without God and without hope. It has a mixed population of probably three or four thousand, including a few Europeans (mostly Portuguese), Mohammedans, Hindoos, half-castes, and natives of different tribes. The place boasts of a Romish church and a "padre," whose business it is to say masses, baptize children, and probably once in two or three years perform a marriage ceremony.

All classes unite in selling intoxicating liquors to the natives, but very little is imported, as sugar cane, palm and cashew trees all grow here in abundance, and out of these the natives are kept more than supplied all the year round. Some of the Mohammedans pray four or five times daily, and the call to prayer is heard early in the morning, but they go forth from their devotions to cheat, deceive, and sell rum to the natives; for although they do not drink themselves, still they have no compunction whatever, apparently, about selling it to others. Very little is known about social purity, and marriage is almost totally disregarded. Agents come here from Europe, leaving their wives and families at home, and while here support half-caste concubines.

With the help of Bibles and other Scripture portions which the Trinitarian Bible Society kindly supplied, and tracts in Portuguese and Arabic received from the Religious Tract Society, I am endeavouring to confess the Lord Jesus before this emphatically "wicked and adulterous generation." I have an interesting school, and being alone in the work, between doctoring, teaching, visiting, etc., manage to keep pretty well employed.

THE GOSPEL IN VALENCIA.

Mr. Carlos A. Haglund, of the Swedish Baptist Mission, Valencia, writes:—"Ours is the only Spanish Protestant congregation in this city and province. I came here in 1885, and began mission work among the Scandinavian sailors. Before then there was no Protestant work at all. By and by, I had the opportunity of preaching the Gospel to Spaniards also, first in the reading-room I had opened for sailors, and later in a hall I had rented in the city. Notwithstanding the opposition of the Roman Catholic priesthood, a number of earnest souls have received salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. Our church numbers twenty-one members, and we hope to receive more soon.

"There are great difficulties in finding a hall in such a city as this, where the influence of the Romish priesthood is so great. We have twice been turned out of buildings we have rented. Our little congregation has begun to collect money for building a chapel where we may preach the Gospel without hindrance. They cannot do much, as they are all very poor, but help has been promised in Sweden and America, and we hope that the Lord will move brethren in other countries to help us."

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

MARIAN-STREET, HOMERTON.—On behalf of a Christmas treat to starving children.—JOHN BRETT, 46, High-street, Homerton, E.

NORTH BOW.—Rev. F. R. Andrews, 55, Tredegar-road, E., pleads for aged and infirm poor; gifts, garments, and pecuniary help needed.

THE WEST MARYLEBONE MISSION asks help in giving free meals, Christmas treats, lantern services, &c.—JAMES SPRUNT, St. James's-hall, George-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

COWCROSS MISSION.—Mrs. Catlin pleads for her aged poor and suffering children, asking clothing, boots, food, toys, and gifts.—Address, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

CHELSEA LODGING-HOUSES.—Mr. W. Hodson, 73, Manor-street, S.W., asks, on behalf of the workers in the lodging-houses, help to give the inmates a special treat at this season.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND MISSION asks help to feed poor starving children, and give some Christmas cheer.—Address, GEORGE FULLER, Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E.

ST. PHILIP'S, BETHNAL GREEN.—The vicar asks aid in giving Christmas treats to 1500 poor children and 500 aged poor.—Rev. R. W. LOVERIDGE, St. Philip's Vicarage, Bethnal Green, E.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.—Help is needed to give 500 poor a Christmas dinner, and 1000 children a Christmas treat.—Address, W. CHORLEY, 6, Elephane-road, Canonbury, N.

POOR WHITECHAPEL JEWS.—Mr. H. Ehrlich, 95, King Edward-road, South Hackney, asks help on behalf of the starved and half-naked children of Abraham coming to his meetings.

LONDON-STREET, DOCKHEAD.—"Last year we gave Christmas dinners to many poor starving families, shall we be enabled so to do again?"—W. BUSTIN, 8, Priter-road, Bermondsey, S.E.

LAMBETH AND SOUTHWARK.—Mr. W. Benson, 129, Royal-road, Kennington Park, S.E. (Christ Church Evangelist), pleads for an immense number of men out of work amongst whom he visits.

CHRIST CHURCH, ST. GILES:—The vicar would be glad of soup and coal tickets for his poor. Pecuniary help would also be most welcome.—Rev. S. A. GRIFFITH, The Vicarage, Endell-street, W.C.

"RUTH ELLIOTT" HOME OF REST FOR POOR CHILDREN.—The secretary asks special help on behalf of the victims of neglect, cruelty, sheltered in this house.—Miss A. P. PECK, Chase Side, Enfield, N.

THE BLIND.—The South London Association for assisting the Blind ask help in providing Christmas meat and small comforts for blind poor.—J. T. EDMOND, Carlton Villa, 155, Brixton-road, S.W.

RICHMOND-STREET, WALWORTH.—The workers plead for the Christmas Dinner Fund, raised for alleviating distress amongst suffering and deserving poor.—Treasurer, J. T. DUNN, 93, Grosvenor-park, S.E.

PORTSMOUTH POOR.—The Bethesda Town Mission asks special help at this season for its work amongst poor widows, children, and other distressed families.—Com. B. H. KEY, R.N., Downham, St. Edward's-road, Southsea.

MARYLAND POINT MISSION—The workers find themselves surrounded by distressed poor, some of the cases being very sad indeed. They are seeking to help, but require assistance so to do.—JOHN STABB, 6, Worcott-road, Stoke Newington, N.

THE LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION, which is "doing a great amount of good among the cabmen," is in need of help, and not least in its labours in visiting and aiding the needy, sick and dying.—JOHN DUPEE, 55, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.

EAST HAM.—The superintendent of the Boleyn Mission asks assistance in making the little ones right and happy. There are 200 to whom it is desired to give a good tea and prizes of books. Address the Superintendent, Mr. J. COMLEY PAGE, Queen's-square, Upton Park, E.

THE UNION HALL MISSION asks help, inasmuch as the financial position is such as to cause grave anxiety. There are also many of the Lord's poor in great need, while it is hoped to give Christmas treats to poor men, women, and children.—R. BILKE, Abergeldie, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

ITALIANS IN LONDON.—Rev. Dr. Stauder, of the Italian Evangelical Mission, hopes to provide a Christmas tree and New Year's dinner for the poor. Far from their sunny land, these wayfarers have been too long neglected.—Address: Italian Educational Home, 34, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

SOHO AND ST. GILES'S MISSION.—It is hoped to give 300 poor deserving families a Christmas dinner, also 200 poor men, and the usual treat to the poor children connected with this mission. The poverty in the district is very serious just now.—WILLIAM HARRISON, 20, Merrick-square, Newington, S.E.

HOPE MISSION, Banner Street, St. Luke's.—Mr. S. J. Glover, of 88, Bishopsgate-street, appeals for funds to provide a Christmas dinner for about 400 children. The mission has a soup kitchen, and during the year 3263 halfpenny dinners, and 3464 farthing dinners, also 3317 quarts of soup, have been distributed.

MILLWALL.—The Pastor of the Congregational Church, West Ferry-road, writes: We have much distress around us, and for several weeks have been giving away food, and helping so far as possible. We should be thankful to be remembered by friends of the poor.—W. J. TEMPLE, 32, Strafford-street, Millwall, E.

EAST-END CHRISTMAS DINNER.—We are arranging again to give some thousands of Christmas dinners to unemployed poor. The severe weather brings terrible suffering into vast numbers of families. Two hundred pounds will enable us to provide nearly six thousand Christmas dinners.—(Rev.) J. W. ATKINSON, Claremont, Cawley-road, E.

GOLDEN LANE AND HOXTON COSTER'S MISSION.—Mr. W. J. Orsman, L.C.C., Costers' Hall, 242, Hoxton-street, London, N., needs funds to continue supplying free breakfasts and halfpenny dinners to 200 poor children, also to keep the Irish stew soup coppers boiling; and to supply a cold dinner to 500 starving children at their homes on Christmas Day.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON MISSION.—There are thousands of children in and around Kent-street and Trinity-street, Borough, who are in a most deplorable condition through want, and to whom a good dinner or articles of left-off clothing would be a real treat. We ask help in providing something for them.—J. T. SMITH, 86, Fort-road, Bermondsey, S.E.

FEMALE CONVALESCENTS.—The After-Care Association for Poor Female Convalescents on Leaving Asylums for the Insane appeal for help to carry on and extend the work. Cases are assisted by placing in convalescent homes, finding suitable work, and by grants of money and clothing.—Mr. H. THORNHILL ROXBY, the Church House, Dean's-yard, Westminster, S.W.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—The Christmas season affords many open doors for the work of this mission, and funds are just now specially needed for the institute, for the outlying gatherings of pantomime employés, for the Orphanage, and the new Seaside Holiday Institute, at Hastings.—Rev. COURTHOPE TODD, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

BETHNAL GREEN POOR.—The Parmiter-street Sunday-school and mission hope to reopen their soup kitchen and provide many needy ones with soup twice a week. Much want and sickness are prevalent. The committee earnestly appeal for Christmas gifts from Christian friends.—G. W. L. BARRACLOUGH, Hon. Sec., 11, King Edward-road, South Hackney, E.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.—The workers hope to have the usual Christmas and New Year gatherings of and treats to aged widows, mothers, factory girls, rough young men and lads, and Sunday-school children. At present soup is being given to about a thousand poor weekly. They will be thankful for any help the Lord's people are led to send.—Miss MACPHERSON, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

Rev. J. STOCKWELL WATTS, "Elswick," West Bank, Amhurst Park, N., wishes to throw a little cheery brightness into dreary lives, by providing two or three hundred families of the destitute poor and unemployed with a good dinner in their own homes on Christmas day. Also, to afford a little more sustained assistance to the more needy cases, he is anxious to at once re-open Mrs. Stockwell Watts's soup kitchen.

EMIGRATION HOMES.—Misses B. Rye and L. Still, who have just returned from a visit to Miss Rye in the Home at Niagara, and from visiting many old girls, now doing well in Canada, issue an urgent appeal for aid in this important work, which since the commencement has transplanted nearly 4,000 girls to a new and happier sphere. Address Miss LIZZIE STILL, Avenue House, High street, Peckham.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY has sent to about 600 institutions—hospitals, infirmaries, workhouses, refuges, soldiers' and sailors' institutes—parcels of Christmas and other literature. These are annually looked for with much eagerness. From one of the great hospitals comes the following:—"The contents are most suitable for our use, and will, I am sure, be greatly appreciated by the patients, and will help to cheer them."

CONGRESS HALL, CLAPTON.—Miss Eva Booth asks help in order to bring a little comfort and gladness to the most aged and destitute of the East-end. "We propose bringing together 2,000 of such, and give them a substantial Christmas dinner, and by the aid of our bands of music and singing, give them an enjoyable and profitable afternoon. Then at the close of the meal we shall tell them of the love and pity of Jesus."—Address, The Congress Hall, Clapton, N.E.

FIELD LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.—"The present disruption in the labour market has intensified the distress amongst the deserving poor, and the applications made to us for help are more heart-rending than they have been for many years. No deserving, homeless case is refused shelter in our refuges whilst there is a bed vacant, and no friendless girl is sent away unhelped. We wish to provide Christmas dinners for 800 of the homeless and for 600 deserving families, and a New Year's dinner for 800 poor children." Treasurer, Mr. Wilfrid A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street.

THE PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES' HOME has had a strain on its funds owing to two distressing cases, which had to be received free. This fund provides a small free temporary home at the seaside for poor Protestant governesses needing change and rest, or waiting for engagements, and gives in case of need pecuniary help and clothing. Warm clothing is much needed; blankets would be very acceptable.—Miss CLEMENTINA KINGDON, 22, Chatham-place, Brighton.

THE STRANGERS' REST.—Miss Clara M. S. Lowe has written an interesting booklet entitled, "Reminiscences of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, E." The excellent work of the Rest is described in detail, and in a manner which cannot but impress every reader of its commanding importance. Copies may be had from the Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E., price twopence.

"ROBIN" DINNERS.—Mr. Bullock and his helpers, who for fifteen years have been giving thousands of these dinners at this season, once more ask liberal help in order to give treats to the poorest children in London and many provincial towns.—Address "Robin," Coomrith, Bournemouth.

Letters to the Editor.

"SPIRITUAL POWER."

Sir,—In the letters under this head are there not points of the greatest importance overlooked? Once we were enemies to God. Now, by the death of his Son, we who believe in Jesus are reconciled. Our God has been pleased to put us in the position of his children. He has sealed us by his Spirit unto the day of redemption, thereby marking each as his own property.

Yet we are still in the body, and the flesh, so often spoken of, with all its corruptions, is still strong within us, striving for the mastery; yet (Gal. v. 17) the Spirit strives against the flesh the perpetual conflict, so that the flesh may not do the things it would, which are afterwards detailed. But this warfare is internal: the victory certain by the care of Christ. The "spiritual power" is not to be looked for in emotional or tangible feeling, but to be displayed in action; similarly, as when a work has to be done, a man does not test the strength of the muscles of his arms and legs, but sets about doing it.

Another branch of spiritual power is often misunderstood. In 1 Cor. xii. diversities of gifts are mentioned. When in ardour the soul desires to serve Christ by preaching the Gospel, either at home or abroad, it is taken for granted that the impulse is from God; often, indeed, it may be so. But are there not other modes of service, according to what a man or woman hath? There is the word of wisdom —the word of knowledge, nine different gifts are named, as also others in verse 28; and though many of these are now withheld, yet all of them were designed and bestowed, as the eye and the ear, for the benefit of the whole body, comprising all the members. Since each member has received a gift, is this to be left in abeyance? Is it not rather to be diligently employed according to the donor's instruction, not, however, to interfere or obstruct any one spreading the glad tidings of redeeming love on every occasion?

Does not the passage Mark iv. 26—32 refer, not to individual growth, but to the "kingdom of God" in its enlarged capacity? while 2 Pet. iii. 18 exhorts the individual to grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Robert Nelson.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of December 8 there is, under the above heading, a letter signed "An Anxious One," and as I am much impressed with the frankness and honesty of its tone, I cannot refrain from asking you to give me space for a brief reply. If any anxious one wishes to correspond with me directly, I will gladly reply more fully.

1. From the Word of God, and from my own observation and experience as a business man, I have no hesitation in saying that the following of an honest trade or business does not interfere with spiritual progress. The cares and difficulties which men in trade have to meet with will always keep an exercised Christian depending upon his Heavenly Father for Divine light and guidance and strength to enable him to overcome and avoid the snares, devices, and wiles of the devil, the pride and covetousness of his own heart, and the allurements and distractions of an evil world; and anything that keeps a child of God in his Father's presence must lead to a deepening acquaintance with his heart and increased confidence in Him.

I would also direct attention to the following Scriptures:—"Let ours also learn to maintain good works," or, as translated in margin, "profess honest trades" for necessary uses (Titus iii. 14); "This we commanded you, that if any would not work neither should he eat" (2 Thess. iii. 10); "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel" (1 Timothy v. 8); "These hands have ministered unto my necessities. I have showed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak" (Acts xx. 34, 35); "Let him that stole steal no more, but rather let him labour, working with his hands" (Eph. iv. 28).

It is my privilege to be intimately acquainted with many of God's people of all denominations, and I have no hesitation in saying that many of the holiest men I know are active business men.

2. It is most important that "An Anxious One" should not be deceived by high-sounding phrases as to higher Christian life and special power obtained at consecration meetings. There is no higher or holier path for the child of God on earth than the path of simple faith. "As ye have, therefore, received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him" (Col. ii. 6). We have received Him by faith, and we are to walk by faith. The path of the child of God is so very simple that I am grieved to see it so often shrouded in mystery by speakers and writers. It is a path of continual dependence on God. It consists of trusting in and looking to God, for power to live moment by moment to his glory.

For my own part I never make a single promise, nor register the slightest vow to God, because I am conscious of my own inability to keep them, but I look to Him who has given in his word so many "exceeding great and precious promises," and I ask Him to keep them; I am certain that all who do so will be able at the close of life truthfully to say with Joshua, "Not one good thing hath failed."

3. Every child of God has the Holy Spirit dwelling in him. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God" (1 Cor. vi. 19). "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Romans viii. 9). "In whom ye also having heard the word of the truth, the Gospel of your salvation, in whom having also believed, ye were sealed with the holy spirit of promise." Therefore, we have not to ask God to send down the Holy Spirit to dwell within us, but we have to "watch and pray" that we may be kept from grieving Him.

In conclusion, I recommend "An Anxious One," and all who are similarly exercised as to a "close walk with God," to thank Him heartily for giving them such a desire. It is our privilege to go to Him and tell Him that as He has put that desire into our hearts we look to Him for the power to walk so as to please him. In the thirty-second Psalm, and in many other places, He has promised to instruct, and teach, and guide us, and we can calculate with a certainty on his keeping his word.

We must be careful not to allow Satan to get an advantage over us, when we do fall, but must seek to turn our very faults, and mistakes of every kind, to good account by using them as arguments with God, for his help and power to resist evil, and overcome temptation.

We can tell Him when honestly confessing wherein we have sinned in thought, word, or deed, that we are discovering more and more of our own weakness, and waywardness, and foolishness, and therefore must plead with Him all the more, for the wisdom and the grace and the strength to help in every time of need,

In the path which I have pointed out, there is nothing to gratifying the pride of our hearts. It will not lead us to boast of our own holiness, but on the contrary will rather lead us to discover so much of our own vileness and foolishness, in the light of God's holy eye, that we will be constrained to say with Job, "I abhor myself." And it will lead us to adore more and more the Sovereign grace of God, that has saved such sinners, and has borne with us in such long-suffering grace. Yours faithfully, Benjamin Glasgow.

Burton Lodge, Harrogate.

Dear Sir,—May I be permitted to reply to "An Anxious One" as to spiritual power. The word "power" as used in our English version is represented in the Greek Testament by several distinct words. The two chief forms, however, are ἐξουσια and δυναμις. The first of them indicates authority as exercised by a ruler, and seems to intimate official privilege and prerogative. Thus: "All power is given unto Me." But "spiritual power" is expressed by the word δυναμις, as in the passage, "Tarry ye in the city of of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." All Christians may have this power.

"An Anxious One" need not suppose that ministers and missionaries are the only ones needing it. There is not a mother but needs it in her home to regulate her family; there is not a Sunday-school teacher but needs it. Yes, and we all need it in the workshop, and in our everyday duties.

It is impossible to analyse this power. It is spiritual and invisible. All we can do is to trace the circumstances under which it is given, and the results which flow from it. We see it in its effects; we measure it in its effects. We may trace it in some of its elements, such as courage, faith, love. It will come to us in answer to earnest faith and believing prayer, as it came to the disciples.

I do not know how it will come: perhaps in the rushing wind; perhaps in the still small voice; perhaps in closet privacy; perhaps in sanctuary fulness. But I know it will come, and our hearts will know it when it comes. Let our prayer be:

> Pass me not, O mighty Spirit,
> Thou canst make the blind to see;
> Witnesser of Jesus' merit,
> Speak the word of power to me.
> Even me.

I was very much pleased in reading the testimony the other day uttered by a Christian servant. She was truly converted to God, and her light was shining beautifully in the home where she was living. Some one said to her one day, "I wish I had as much energy as you." "Don't call it my energy," she said, "it is the strength I get by waking up." It came in answer to prayer.

We all may have this power—power over all persons, however wicked, power over sinful appetites and passions, power over persecution when it assails us in the shape of ridicule and scorn, power to refute a sneer, to rebut a scornful look, power in time of sorrow, need, conflict, power in the home and in the workshop. Let us pray for it, and attend to all other conditions. All power comes from Christ, and this will come into our hearts if we make use of the right means. Yours very truly,

Edward Balmford.

The Manse, Westmancote, near Tewkesbury.

WHO ARE THE LAITY?

Dear Sir,—I have just read the letter of Mr. Overy in this week's issue of The Christian, and am surprised that he should ignore what the words laos and clēros meant in the minds of the apostles.

1. Is it not evident that laos meant the people, apart from any relation to the Christian religion?

2. Is it not equally clear that what the apostles meant by clēros was the people of God—saints, sons, disciples, brethren, and believers—apart from any official position?

3. And does not the New Testament confine officers in the Church of Christ to three terms—diaconos, presbuteros, episcopos?

4. Hiereus = Sacerdos — sacrificing priest, never once occurs in the New Testament, as descriptive of believers in Christ.

5. Then, too, surely the whole matter must be settled by an appeal to the Scriptures; for there is no divine standard of appeal outside the "Oracles of God."

6. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches." Rev. ii. 7, 11, 17, 29; iii. 6, 13, 22. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, Harringay. William Firth.

Dear Sir,—Your most excellent and suggestive article, "Who are the Laity?" reminds me of the remark of a good man (who knew no better) in answer to truths urged upon him, much such as those contained in your article, "Why you make me out to be only an ordinary Christian!" This good man had no "episcopal ordination" to boast of; but, as your article remarks, "Sacerdotalism and Sacramentarianism are not confined to the Established Church." However, can one much wonder that those who are taught words which literally form the three foundation stones of Sacerdotalism, namely, baptismal regeneration, Apostolical succession, and priestly absolution, should come to believe what they are taught, and to proclaim it? Who but an Apostle, by original institution, or by succession, could by the laying on of his hands impart the Holy Ghost for office and convey the awful power, "Whose sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven; and whose sins thou dost retain, they are retained?" However truly unscriptural the distinction, as now held, between clergy and laity, it would be a bold assertion that it is not abundantly found in the standards and formularies of Christendom.

I. G. H.

IRELAND AND DRINK.

Dear Sir,—I should be glad if you would allow me, through your widely-circulated paper, to draw attention to the following statistics, which are taken from the recent official returns prepared by the Registrar-General and the Inland Revenue Department. The sum spent in this poor country of Ireland last year, in intoxicating drinks, was over twelve million pounds, or upwards of a million pounds more than the entire gross profits, on every trade, profession, mining and public company, including all the railways and canals, throughout Ireland. Its population (all told) was less than four and three-quarter millions, probably an adult population of less than half this number.

The arrests for drunkenness were 100,528, a steady increase during the last ten years of 30 per cent., whilst the population has diminished during the same period rather over 9 per cent. In the Dublin Metropolitan Police District alone there were 15,521 arrests for drunkenness last year, one third of these being women, or a rate of 441 per 10,000 of the population; but this rate is exceeded by Limerick and Waterford cities. In the latter the annual rate of arrests of "drunk and disorderly" persons was 659 per 10,000 of the population.

The punishment for drunken and disorderly conduct needs to be made more severe. Out of 97,300 convictions last year, nearly 95,000 were let off with a caution or a fine: and the habitual drunkards, of whom nearly 4000 were repeatedly convicted, should have long terms of imprisonment.

Independently of the moral and religious aspect of this sad state of things, the disastrous economic aspect of the drink traffic ought to compel the speedy attention of our statesmen. If every one of your readers were simply to write to the member representing his constituency, or to the Chief Secretary for Ireland, drawing his attention to the subject, and urging the need of Parliamentary interference, I venture to say no Government could set aside such tremendous oral pressure. Is it too much to ask of your aders throughout the United Kingdom to do this?— ours obediently, W. F. Barrett,

Professor of Physics, Royal College
Dublin. of Science for Ireland.

PUBLICANS' CHRISTMAS "SPECS."

Sir,—May I ask your readers' help again this year stop the annual extortion by which the earnings of e poor are by the "raffle" dodge absorbed by some principled publicans, who offer a few geese and any bottles of gin, brandy, wine, and beer as a bait working men? A police superintendent showed at one publican sold £351 worth of tickets for prizes the retail value of £67 only. In another case two ds won bottles of spirits, and were found drunk and arly dead on the highway.

All such "raffles," "specs.," or "prize drawings" licensed premises are illegal, and every publican lding one is liable to a penalty of £500, and to be prisoned as a rogue and a vagabond. The police force the law more stringently now than formerly, t raffles are still held in some places. A note to e local mayor or chairman of county bench, naming e public-house where the raffle is to be held, with pies of the letter to the head constable and local perintendent, will usually be enough to remove this p for the unwary. Should it not be found that the ffle is abandoned a letter to the Solicitors to the easury, Whitehall, London, enclosing copies of lice correspondence, will ensure prompt suppression.

Yours truly,
Birmingham. W. C. Amery.

THE POSTMAN'S CHRISTMAS DAY.

Sir,—As Christmas Day this year falls on a Sun- y the postmen in provincial towns and rural dis- cts are likely to have a hard day's work on the Day Rest unless correspondents post their cards, etc., as to be delivered on Saturday, or earlier.

May I suggest that your numerous readers should t post any cards, etc., on Saturday, December 24?

Your obedient servant,
Charles Hill.

MUSSOORIE, INDIA.

The Christian Training School and Orphanage was nded in March, 1890. Its object is to impart a nd English and Christian education to the ldren of Eurasians and Anglo-Indian parents of ited means, and to succour those who have no ans at all. Provision is made for the reception of hans of both sexes. The school has steadily wn. Last year there were thirty-one scholars, l this year, the accommodation having been in- ased, sixty-two children have been housed, fed, l educated. Yet upwards of thirty applications l to be refused. A house fitted to receive at least children is urgently required for next year. This l necessitate a great expenditure by way rent ess £2,000 can be raised to secure a suitable lding. Rev. T. Graham Tarn, St. Andrew's-street ptist Church, Cambridge, will gladly receive and ward any help toward this object.

AN ISLAND DESTROYED.

Writing from Tondano, Minahassa, Celebes, therlands India, Mr. A. Lea, Superintendent Col- teur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, s refers to the mention of a volcanic eruption in the nd of Great Sangier in our issue of August 18:—

Awful though the eruption was (two thousand per- s having perished), such steps were at once taken the Netherlands India Government at Menado as dered famine impossible.

Much rain falls in Sangier, and by this time much he island is as beautiful and verdant as ever. I nt six weeks in Great Sangier in February and rch, when I had the joy of selling eighteen hundred w Testaments, Gospels, and Psalms, visiting many he villages which suffered most. I was in the ad- ing island of Siaou, which forms one of the gier group, when the eruption occurred, and at e went by boat in company with Mr. Paul Kelling, missionary of Siaou, to render what help we ld.

ORD RADSTOCK, referring to his note last week he departure of Lady Radstock, points out that word "us" crept into his quotation, "Thou hast de—most blessed for ever; exceeding glad with the of thy countenance." He adds: "We are indeed akful for her joy; but it would not be true to say t 'exceeding glad' was the description of our e. We shall greatly value the prayers of the d's people, that we may all be vessels better fitted the Master's use."

Evangelistic Notes.

Market Rasen.—A six days' mission, just held here by Mr. J. B. Atkinson, has been much blessed.

Rev. G. Eddy has concluded a capital ten days' mission at Hale (Hants). Many profess to have received blessing.

Merthyr Tydfil.—Mr. Raymond Preston, a Joyful News evangelist, has held here a very encouraging mission.

Liverpool.—Mr. Lancelot Middleton has held a very interesting mission in Great Homer-street Chapel, and many indications have appeared of spiritual result.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's special services at Lacock, Wilts, and much blessing has resulted, many having professed decision for Christ; out of these several are young men.

Mr. J. H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, had a very encouraging season of tent work last summer in and around Romney Marsh. The tent is laid up for the winter, and Mr. Cooke is now conducting a mission at Lydd.

Longsight.—At the Railway Men's Mission, a special fortnight mission has been held by Miss Easterfield and Mr. A. Gooderham. The services have been well attended, and many professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Mr. L. Sayer has concluded young people's missions at the Presbyterian Churches, Brockley and Gravesend. In both cases the attendances were large throughout, and abundant tokens of the presence and work of the Holy Spirit were graciously given.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith closed last week a three months' special and united mission in Liverpool, which is believed to have been made the means of much reviving in various districts of the city. A similarly extended mission is being arranged for in Manchester next spring.

Gospel Hall, Totterdown, Bristol.—Mr. Gawyn Cummings has held a three weeks' mission here, which has been attended with much blessing. The meetings have been well attended, and there is reason to believe that a good number have been brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Bethnal Green.—Mr. Henry Hammond has completed an encouraging special Gospel mission at Hope Town Hall, Bethnal Green-road, E. Great blessing has attended the services, and many precious souls have been won for the Saviour. Mr. Hammond's address is 15, Russell-road, Holloway, N.

Lumphanan, N.B.—Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society, has just completed a fortnight's mission in the Free Church. The attendance throughout was fair, and the earnest appeals will long be remembered by many. Seed has been sown which, doubtless, shall yet bear much fruit.

Tring, Herts.—Mr. T. Goudie has just finished a fifteen days' mission here. Large numbers of people came night after night to hear the simple Gospel, and God graciously blessed his servant. Numbers of anxious souls were dealt with in the enquiry room, and many it is believed have accepted Christ.

Lynchburg, Va.—Mr. Geo. C. Needham and Mr. W. Henry Collins have been holding special services at the first Baptist Church, Lynchburg. The meetings were full of profound interest and blessing, every day a business men's meeting was held, and there were children's meetings during the week.

Reawick, Shetland.—Mr. James Wharton, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a mission in the Congregational Church here, extending over nearly three weeks. The interest awakened was most encouraging, and a number of young people, chiefly from the Bible-class and Sunday-school, professed to decide for Christ.

Mr. Rowland Sturt has concluded a ten days' mission at Exeter Hall, Plymouth. The building was filled by most attentive congregations. The superintendent of the work, Mr. W. T. Lee, who has been much used of God in the ministry of the Word, and who has charge of the regular services of the hall, also took part in the meetings. On Sunday last Mr. Sturt addressed two meetings at St. Andrew's Hall in the same town.

Birmingham.—The mission at Summer Hill Chapel, Monument-road, mentioned in our last issue, continues to show many tokens of fruit. A correspondent of the Birmingham Methodist News writes:—"Our own church roll will be increased by 178, while many of the converts have been handed over to other churches. The mission proper is now over, but the tide of blessing continues to flow. In some cases whole households have been saved, scores of Christians have been quickened."

Guernsey.—Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a united mission in this island. The Market Hall was crowded the first Sunday, and St. Julian's Hall, the largest one in the island, has been crowded on succeeding Sundays. All denominations have united heartily together, and such an interest has been aroused that it is confidently hoped a similar mission will be held early in the New Year. Several have professed to be saved, and God's own people strengthened and revived greatly.

Personalia.

Archdeacon Hessey is, we regret to hear, again seriously ill.

The Bishop of Liverpool, who was ill last week, is now going on well.

Rev. Dr. Herber Evans has accepted the Principalship of the North Wales Congregational College, Bangor.

The Bishop of Wakefield, who has been ill since his accident, is now improving much, and will shortly be able to resume his duties.

Rev. G. A. and Mrs. Shaw have been given permission to leave Farafanga (Madagascar), owing to the delicate state of their health.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule has, it is stated, declined to become a candidate for the Lady Margaret Professorship of Divinity at Cambridge, vacant through the death of Professor Hort.

Mr. Joseph Rabinowich, of Kischeneff, South Russia, is hoping to attend a meeting of his British friends at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 28.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., has finally decided to accept the invitation to become minister at Marylebone Presbyterian Church, subject to his reception into the Presbyterian Communion next spring by the Synod. Dr. Pentecost had an invitation from a Congregational church in Boston, U.S.A., which he has declined.

Obituary.

ARCHDEACON WHATELY.

The only son of the late Archbishop Whately recently passed away at Lee, near Blackheath. He had laboured many years in and near Dublin, and was subsequently incumbent of Littleton, near Staines. His health had in later years prevented his preaching or taking any active work, but he was a constant contributor to The Fireside and kindred serials, and an upholder of every good work within his reach, and, above all, a consistent and outspoken advocate of evangelical principles. His death was sudden, but it was passing into the presence of the Saviour whom he had loved and trusted with childlike faith.

MRS. SINCLAIR PATERSON.

Many will sorrow to hear of the bereavement which has just fallen on Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson, in the loss of his beloved wife, who passed away on the evening of Wednesday week (14th inst.). Some of us who were present a year or two ago, when Dr. and Mrs. Paterson celebrated their silver wedding, know how the helpfulness and energy of her who has now been called hence were described. For these many years she has been a true helpmeet and fellow-worker in the Gospel. All who knew anything of the work in Notting Hill were well aware how active and sympathetic Mrs. Paterson was in every good service; but were fuller testimony demanded it was amply forthcoming in the crowd of poor mothers who on Saturday morning stood in Kensal Green Cemetery, weeping bitterly around the open grave where was then laid the ashes of her who had been to them so true and helpful a friend. The large mothers' meeting in connection with Trinity Presbyterian church, and the mission work carried on actively in surrounding poor streets, Mrs. Paterson had long made her peculiar sphere.

She was a daughter of the late Mr. John Anderson, of Glasgow, who but recently was called home. Until last year she had been vigorous and well, but in the early summer a serious internal disease manifested itself, and proved at length the King's messenger to summon her away. Although suffering much at times, she was to the last cheerful and restful, bearing a bright testimony to the sustaining grace and presence of her Saviour.

MR. WILLIAM WOOD, EDINBURGH.

This well-known citizen died on Thursday at 4, Oxford-terrace. He was in his eightieth year, and was married to one of the daughters of the late Dr. Chalmers. Of a family long connected with the legal profession in Edinburgh, Mr. Wood was one of the original members of the Society of Accountants, and for a long time acted as one of the examiners of that body. He took little or no part in more public work, but devoted a large part of his leisure to the financial interests of the Free Church of Scotland, of which he was a strenuous supporter since the Disruption. An elder in Free St. George's Church, he enjoyed the lifelong friendship of Dr. Candlish, and latterly of Dr. Whyte. He took a special interest in the fund for the widows and orphans of ministers of the Free Church, and as an adviser in committee his opinions were sought and highly valued.

The Book World.

The Young Standard Bearer, for 1892, is an attractive volume with many illustrations. (Wells Gardner, Darton, and Co.)

The annual volume of The Home Visitor has many excellent features. There are instructive articles as well as entertaining stories. Hunt & Co.

Recitations and Concerted Pieces for Bands of Hope and Sunday-schools is an admirable compilation by James Weston. It is sure to find favour among publications of its class. (1s. Partridge.)

Bluebell, by Mrs. Marshall, is well described as a story of child-life nowadays. It has been written for young people, and the beautiful character it delineates is calculated to impress them for good. (3s. 6d. Shaw.)

Lady Constance Howard's Tasty Tit-Bits and Dishes Dainty (1s. 6d. Record Press, 376, Strand) furnishes a large variety of recipes for the fastidious palates of invalids and convalescents whose purses are not too lean.

Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons have published, in quarto form, an edition of The Peep of Day, with coloured pictures and other illustrations. The volume will rejoice the hearts of thoughtful young people, and its perusal is likely to benefit them spiritually.

Chris Willoughby; or, Against the Current, is a healthful and entertaining tale for boys, by Florence E. Burch. (Nelson.) It enforces wisdom of acknowledging and resisting temptation. It is got up in excellent style, and will prove a welcome present to young people.

Illustrated Missionary News, Vol. xxvi., (1s. 6d., 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) Pictures of life and labour in many lands, with notes and gleanings as to missionary service and experience among all kinds of people, render this volume a storehouse of useful information, and apt illustrations on missionary matters.

Rev. James Neil has compiled a work, Pictures and Stories from the Holy Land for Children, with illustrations by Henry Harper and others. It is so arranged as to make a children's painting book as well as a reading book, and for this interesting exercise instructions are given at the end. (2s. 6d. Lang Neil & Co., Brighton.)

The King's Highway: a Journal of Scriptural Holiness, has attained its twenty-first year. The latest volume contains many articles of special value. The next volume will begin a new series, which the editors hope to make helpful to all children of God to whatever denomination they may belong. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Meditations on the Book of Ruth. By C. McK. (1s. G. Morrish.) This is an instructive little work from the pen of one who knows the Scriptures. It is likely to afford special interest to young believers, and as the exposition points the practical bearing of the narrative upon everyday life, the pages will administer spiritual profit likewise.

Monk and Knight is a very instructive story, by Frank W. Gunsaulus. (Nelson.) Men whose names stand out in the history of the Reformation flit across the scene, and with special appropriateness the frontispiece is an engraving of Erasmus of Rotterdam. This is a historical study of real worth, and we heartily commend it to our readers.

Rev. John Brownlie, of Portpatrick, of whose chaste and spiritual verse we have spoken on former occasions, has issued another small volume of poems, Pilgrim Songs (1s. Nisbet). Whether meditating on God's providence, or praising Christ for his great redemption, the author's lines breathe a spirit of love and pious restfulness that will render them precious to many.

Three Evangelistic Annuals. A very useful volume from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, is The British Messenger (1s. 6d.), containing the year's parts of a sound and attractive magazine, well illustrated throughout. The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) is in large type, and will be specially welcomed to the aged. Good News (4d). is another excellent collection of articles on Gospel subjects.

The Preacher's Daughter. By Mrs. Amelia Barr. (3s. 6d. Sampson Low and Co.) A powerfully-written and realistic tale of Yorkshire life during the time of the cotton famine, caused by the American civil war. The interest of the story, both individual and social, is well sustained. Romance is mingled with stern experience, and a deep religious vein runs through the narrative, which may be read with much profit.

The Converted Catholic. Vol. IX., containing the numbers for the year now closing, shows the progress of the work which Rev. James A. O'Connor, formerly a Romish priest, has been conducting in New York for the last fourteen years. The magazine is especially valuable to such as are interested in the evangelisation of Roman Catholics. (1 dol. per annum. J. A. O'Connor, 142, West Twenty-first-street, New York.

The Christmas number of Regions Beyond is entitled Lost Lives. (3d. Partridge.) It is a constructive and strong appeal for co-operation in mission work, and not only shows how in heathen lands lives are being lost through Christian neglect, but how they may be saved by earnest and aggressive testimony. An account is given of the "Regions Beyond Helpers' Union," of which particulars may be learned by writing to Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.

Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster have helped to give character to the presentation of Mr. Thomas Spurgeon's little book of poems, Scarlet Threads and Bits of Blue, by the red and blue printing. We do not find in the youthful pastor's verses the profundity of idea or the obscurity of diction that are supposed to accompany genius. There is an ample flow of plain and pleasant phrase, expressing sound thought, and in the case of the temperance poems a good deal of humour. (1s.)

The Pillar in the Night is a new book by Dr. Macduff. (3s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) It is a companion to "Bow in the Cloud," and is equally tender and beautiful in contents and style. There are daily readings for a month, addressed for the most part to mourners. In the words of the author, the book "is sacred to dimmed eyes. and broken hearts, and tender memories. Though not exclusively, it is the wide family of the bereaved the writer has chiefly in view." Quotations and allusions, poetical and historical, are freely scattered about these very comforting pages.

The Guide: A Help to Present Progress and Future Well-being. Volume for 1892. (2s. Glasgow: William Love, 226, Argyle-street.) There is about these pages a solidity which will strongly commend them to thoughtful readers. For the most part the magazine addresses young men, and is a safe guide to self-culture. There are some good articles setting forth methods of conducting Bible classes, also essays and discussions on questions of outstanding importance. Rev. P. A. Gordon Clark, of Glasgow, contributes a series of papers on books that help the culture of the Christ-like life.

Margaret Stephen Kennedy. By her husband, James Kennedy. (6s. Nisbet and Co.) Here we have a simple record of a life early consecrated to God, and spent for the most part in spreading the light of the Gospel among the people of India. The wives of missionaries have sometimes to be content with shining in the reflected light of their husband's reputation, but Mrs. Kennedy had sufficient force of character to make her own mark in the circles in which she moved and worked. It must have been a pleasing, as well as mournful, task for the veteran missionary to write these memorials of a true life helper.

The Marriage Knot Wisely Tied, by Rev. W. Unsworth (3s. 6d. Charles H. Kelly), is an admirable dissertation on a theme of universal interest and importance. The amount of sanctified wisdom that is packed into these chapters is wonderful. As a minister of the Gospel Mr. Unsworth has gained no small experience both as to the successes and the failures of the married state. He writes, of course, from the Christian standpoint. We could wish for nothing better than that all candidates for matrimony, as well as all graduates in the university of the wedded life, were actuated by the principles here laid down.

Did Moses Write the Pentateuch After All? By F. E. Spencer, M.A. (Elliot Stock.) The title is a little startling, but a brief inspection of the book shows that the writer is unaffected by the plague of "higher criticism." Without much trouble he shows that history is based on that kind of testimony which German critics and their admirers are wont to despise when used in support of the antiquity and authenticity of the Old Testament writings. His arguments from the influence of God's providential dealings with various characters are forcible, but we should like to see a more decisive conclusion drawn, and any author but Moses proved impossible.

Rest and Reaping. Vol. vi. The year's numbers of Miss Charlotte Mason's magazine make an attractive volume. Among the principal contents are:—A series of papers on "Jerusalem in 1892," by Rev. W. H. Daniels, M.A.; expository chapters on the Revelation, by the editor; "Twenty Years Ago and Now: or, Missionary Environment," by M. J. Oxlad; and poems by many pens on a variety of topics. Of course, the work of the House of Rest is kept well to the front. The pages are spiritual in tone, and cannot but prove helpful to those who are spiritually minded. (2s. 6d. Morgan and Scott.)

Christmas Cards. In the front rank for variety and artistic merit, as usual, stand the productions of Messrs. Hildesheimer & Faulkner. There is a marked change of style this year, the pictorial element being almost entirely absent. No longer does landscape form a leading feature. Delicate white cards, single and folding, with scalloped edges, embossed with flowers, and a few simple lines of greeting, have supplanted the designs of previous years. In a word, a less elaborate style is adopted, which will, we believe, be considered a distinct relief by many. Booklets, calendars, &c., &c., also deserve a cordial recognition and extensive sale, chief among which may be named, "Rambles round the Trossachs," "Sketches from Derwentwater" (booklets); and "Loving Hearts," "Stolen Moments," "Wise Saws" (calendars.)

Paul's Prayers and Other Sermons is the title of a new volume by Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester. (5s. Alexander and Shepheard.) The leading discourses expound some of the most pregnant of the petitions of the Apostle to the Gentiles in the interest of the churches to whom he addressed Epistles. They cover a wide range of doctrine soundly evangelical, and point many and important lessons for life and godliness. There are in all thirty sermons in the book, all of them strong and full alike as to Scripture exposition and experimental religion. "The Measure of Immeasurable Power" is based on Eph. i. 19, 20; "The Universal Burden and its Bearer" on Isai. liii. 6; and "An Outline of a Devout Life," on Job xxii. 26-29. Fully up to the high standard which we have come to expect from this gifted divine, these sermons are such as thoughtful Christians cannot but read to great spiritual profit.

Expository Lectures and Sermons. By the late Professor W. G. Elmslie. (6s. Hodder and Stoughton.) This posthumous collection of the late gifted Professor's utterances makes us realise anew how much the Christian world has lost by his death. The great outstanding note of his testimony was honesty. He had the rare gift of seeing all round a subject or an aspect of truth, and of projecting himself into the centre of the circumstances relating to it. So there was a fine balance about his thinking that is by no means common among young writers. The lectures on Old Testament characters that occupy half of this precious volume are notable specimens of his power to impart freshness and practicality to well-worn themes. In the sermons we seem again to hear the gentle, earnest voice telling out the breathings of a true and loving heart, guided by one of the keenest of intellects. When shall we look upon his like again?

Bishop Ryle's address for 1893 is entitled Your Sins, and described as "a subject for all who think." It is full of sound doctrine, and pointed with a searching appeal. (Hunt & Co.)

Robert Banks & Sons issue once more their useful Congregational and Baptist Almanacks (2d. each), which, so far as the Metropolitan area is concerned, afford in a small compass much serviceable information.

The Supreme Choice is a heart-searching booklet by J. G. Govan, published (1d.) by The Faith Mission, 16, Moss-street Paisley. It is founded on the choice of Moses as described in Heb. xi. 24-27, and deserves many readers.

Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton have published for the seventeenth year The Minister's Pocket Diary and Clerical Vade Mecum, for 1893. Those for whom it is intended will find this a very useful manual. (2s.)

Mr. C. Caswell, of Birmingham, has published two beautiful booklets in verse, by Mary Gorges. A New Year's Blessing is based on 1 Chron. xxii. 16, each stanza opening with "The Lord be with thee." A "Motto for the New Year" is entitled Jesus Only. The thoughts are spiritual, and admirably expressed. (1s. per dozen.)

Mr. G. M. Miller, of 15, Cambridge-terrace, Belgravia, London, S.W., has published an excellent cabinet photograph of Mr. Richard Weaver, the well-known evangelist. The photograph is very highly finished, and is exceedingly striking and life-like. Copies of it may be obtained of Mr. Miller at 1s. 7d. each, post free.

The Almanach du Temperant, 1893, is an attractive publication, likely to prove useful to those engaged in evangelistic work among French-speaking people of various ranks and tastes. Issued from Lyons, it may not only be procured in Switzerland, but also at the National Temperance Publication Depôt, 33, Paternoster-row.

The Book of Common Prayer Search-and-Find Almanac, 1893, by M. A. E. B. Preface by Rev. H. C. Moule, M.A. Kerby and Co. 3d. Clear type, simple arrangement, spiritual teaching, recommend this almanac. Opposite to short extracts from the collects, prayers, Litany, etc., are blank spaces to be filled in; also Scripture quotations to be searched out.

The Drink Traffic as it Affects our Great Cities is a stirring pamphlet just issued (6d.) by Rev. R. W. M. Dobbie, of Glasgow. In the words of one who has seen for himself its evils, he exposes the ravages of the plague. In twelve brief chapters, he deals with the question in various aspects, giving statistics of great value, and urging in conclusion the duty (1) of personal abstinence; (2) of helping the victims of the drink crave; and (3) of forwarding direct veto legislation.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 25.—1 SAM. XIV.

It is a piece of Israelite chivalry that we read of here. Two men against a garrison, but with them was a third, who wrought for them, though they were but few. The work that was done that day was due to the faith that brought Divine power on the scene. There is no restraint on God's part; would there were none on ours! Though the steep crags be filled with the forms of the foes of God and man, impurity, drink, passion, a very legion of devils, yet two may chase a garrison, and send a trembling throughout the host. Nay, it is not necessary that there should be two in human guise, though it is pleasant for Peter and John to be together; but if one lonely disciple is willing to act as armour-bearer to the Captain of the Lord's host, Christ and he will put ten thousand to flight.

However well intended to prevent the loss of time, Saul's adjuration was fatal. Time is not really lost when we stay to refresh ourselves with the honey that drops from the rocks. Though our work for God may seem to demand every minute, we should have time in the end if we stayed to eat of the heavenly food. The mower saves time when he stays to whet his scythe.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 26.—1 SAMUEL XV.

Amalek is always the type of the flesh which God will not spare, though we are all too prone to spare that which is good and prepossessing in its appearance. We do not always see as much evil in the religious self as in the vile and refuse self, which is the wreck of the wildest passions; but every form of the self-life is equally abominable to God, though it may have been kept for sacrifice and burnt offering. Have we ever made God repent having given us a place in his holy service? Have we not turned back from following Him, and failed to perform his commandments? Or does the fact of others having done so make us cry all night? These words of Samuel indicate that a higher conception of the Divine will was beginning to pervade the leaders of Israel, and that they were coming to see that obedience and fealty were more to God than rites and sacrifices. This, however, a lesson that needs repeating always. We are all too prone to substitute the outward for the inward, the altar for the heart, the sweet incense for the fragrance of yielded life.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 27.—1 SAMUEL XVI.

We turn from the wreck of Saul to the idyllic beauty of David's life amongst the sheepcotes of Bethlehem. Brother after brother passes, in stalwart manhood, before the prophet's eye, so ready to think that the outer man was a true reflection of the inner. But it is the hidden man of the heart which is dear to God; humility, unselfishness, willingness to be unknown, unrecognised. Our God is constantly passing over the wise and prudent to reveal Himself to babes, and choosing the weak and base things of the world and bringing to nought the things that are. Amongst his sheep, the boy had watched the heavens declaring the glory of God, and had known himself to be a sheep under God's shepherd care. He had been faithful in a little, and was now called to a wider sphere, as he stepped up to fill it the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him. Every fresh summons is accompanied by a fresh anointing for those who look for it.

Stormy indeed was to be the life into which the shepherd lad now stepped, but he was to be the hero of the world, and the education of circumstance was to add chords to his lyre, which would ever vibrate with unique fulness and beauty the elegies of human life and experience redounding in praise and worship towards God.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 28.—1 SAMUEL XVII.

Giants are found in every life, giant sins, as there are giants in every sphere of work. They stalk across us with sword, and spear, and javelin, and defy the hosts of God. It is not enough to have been terrified by the Paschal Lamb. We shall be driven down before them unless we have learnt to trust them in the name of the Lord of Hosts. Those other armies than those which are reckoned with, and if we live by faith in Him, those armies unseen beside us, and win the victory which is not we win by our sling and stone. The Angel fights beside each David-life that in faith under the panoply of Saul. Give me the sling of a true faith, and the stones chosen from the brook of Eshcol, and no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper. We need more faith in the Living God who saves not with sword and spear, a conviction which will come to us only when we understand that battle is his, his to arrange, his to carry through, whilst we have but to do his bidding, to go forward.

We are educated in the lonely conflict that we may bear, for the greater arena with Philistia.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29.—1 SAMUEL XVIII.

The knitting of soul is so like the love that binds Christ to us. We cannot tell why He loves us, but we are thankful we are permitted to wear his apparel, to use his sword and bow, and to bind his girdle about our loins for purity and strength. David might well go out and prosper when at home there was such love waiting for him. Our outgoings for service must always be balanced by our incomings for communion.

The evil spirit comes upon us the morrow after we have yielded to some special sin. Sin against our brother man will always open the door to sin against God. When we oppose God's Spirit, that turns to ill which was meant for good, just as the sunlight striking on stagnant water causes it to emit a poisonous stench. Thus the blessed sunlight is made evil, by the evil of that it strikes. Beware lest the blessed influences of God's love, meant to be a savour of life, become a savour of death. When the love of God fills the heart, the ungodly stand in awe, whilst the common people are attracted, as Israel and Judah to David. Let us beware of jealousy, which is a manifestation of the spirit of self in its most virulent form. The Lord is able to deliver us from its power, and even to do something better, by filling us so with his love that we may love the Lord our God with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourself.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 30.—1 SAMUEL XIX.

Abide in the secret place of the Most High. Hide thyself, so shalt thou learn what thou oughtest to do. Not content with exchanging his apparel with his friend, Jonathan pleads his cause at court, emblem of One who ever lives to intercede. How thankful we should be that our Saviour pleads, not with a Saul, but with a Father, whose love needs no argument. And yet there is need that the Blood should have been shed and the penalty borne ere the love of God in Christ could take its blessed way with us.

Whilst Saul's troops were watching David's house, the Psalmist within was appealing to God, his strength, and hiding in Him as his high tower (Psa. lix.). Twice he speaks of Him as the God of his mercy, sure of his prevenient grace. How blessed is that frame of mind that can compose Psalms, whilst tumult is around.

There was a great difference between David and Saul at Naioth. Between David and the prophets there was a living sympathy, and he was one with them in the purity and simplicity of his life, but with Saul there was a passing wave of enthusiasm. Brought for a moment within reach of the holy contagion, his soul became strongly moved by it, and for a moment he seemed to have become another man. But the Spirit of God was on him, and not in him. He had the gifts, but not the graces; the blossom, but not the fruit. God save us from a spurious religion, lacking the hidden root of true godliness.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31.—1 SAMUEL XX.

To David there was a step between him and death, to us one between us and life. To die were gain, as it would be the stepping over the threshold into the full life. How bitter was that colloquy between the two friends, and yet how full of cheer for David to have a friend in court who should be able to bring him word of his father's thoughts, and we may comfort ourselves in the thought that there is a link between us and the court of our Father, and that we will be missed if our seat is empty. Thank God, no seat of his children will be permanently empty. There will be no gaps in the gathering of the family, no children in the field who ought to be in the palace.

Jonathan had already a prevision of David's royalty, and that all his enemies would be cut off, but the love he had to him made jealousy impossible; so does perfect love cast out fear, and hate, and envy. How strong must the tendency have been for Jonathan to ally himself with his friend, that together they might face the world; but he clung to his father's fortunes. (See Gen. xii. 1; Psa. xiv. 10, 11; Luke xviii. 29, 30.)

The development of sin is rapid and terrible. Violent as Saul had been to David, his passion rose to an unwonted pitch on this occasion, for it is of the nature of evil to grow from more to more, as fire that spreads. How often the arrows are beyond us! Evil is determined against us. Some symptom indicates our danger, and we must flee, but this is only as the stirring up of the eagle's nest, which drives the young fledglings to venture on the air, and so learn to fly. The little lad knew nothing of the agony of those two hearts. How little do those nearest know all that is transpiring within! but God knows our sorrows, and puts our tears in his bottle.

F. B. M.

REV. J. BAUME, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been compelled by ill-health to leave India. He has been pastor of English congregations at Naina Tal, Poona, and Bombay; where he has done faithful and effective service. Rev. H. A. Crane, of Omaha, has been appointed to take Mr. Baume's place.

RETURNING FROM THE CAPTIVITY. Ezra i. 2.

GOLDEN TEXT. Deut. xxx. 3.

EZRA was a lineal descendant of Aaron (vii. 1—6), and is described as "the priest, the scribe" (Neh. viii. 9). Jewish tradition declares him to have been the founder of the great Synagogue, out of which the later Sanhedrim grew; the compiler of the Old Testament Canon; the originator of Synagogue worship; and the author of ii. Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah. He was a devout man, deeply acquainted with the law of Moses, and zealous for its observance. He was born about B.C. 495, and died at a good old age about B.C. 420—410.

The first six chapters of this book refer to events which took place from B.C. 536 to 516, some years before Ezra appeared. Chapters vii. to xi. refer to a period fifty-eight years later than chapter vi. The language of the main portion of the book is Hebrew, but from iv. 8 to vi. 18, and vii. 12—26 are in Chaldee, the language in which the documents and letters referred to must have been originally written.

According to Jer. xxv. 11, 12, xxix. 10, the captivity was to last for seventy years. This period counts from B.C. 606, the date of the first captivity under Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. i. 1, 2, with 2 Kings xxiv. 1). The edict of Cyrus was issued B.C. 536, and the return took place the following year under Zerubbabel, called here Sheshbazzar (8, with iii. 8 and v. 16). For the number of persons who returned see ii. 64—67. Great as the number appears, it is probable that a still greater number was left behind.

THE PROCLAMATION (1—4).—By whom made.—Cyrus was one of the most extraordinary men of whom history tells. From all accounts we have received of him he appears to have been as remarkable for his integrity and uprightness as for his military skill. He had been for twenty years King of Elam before he conquered Babylon. The capture of that city was not only an event displaying greatest valour and skill, but was at the same time one of the most remarkable instances of fulfilled prophecy. The most remarkable fact concerning Cyrus is that 150 years before he appeared the prophet called him by name (Isa. xliv. 28; xlv. 1). How accurately God knows future events, and how perfectly He controls the thoughts and actions of men. The monarch of almost all the earth (2) is the willing servant of the King of Kings. Why he made it. The answer is undoubtedly, "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." This may have been in three ways:—(1) By direct influence of the Spirit of God, so that he might act thus without being able to give any intelligent reason why. (2) By his being shown by Daniel the prophecies relating to him, as Jewish tradition reports. In this way he saw what was God's intention in giving him such extensive dominion. (3) It is not improbable that political reasons may have influenced him. A strong fortress in Palestine would have been useful to him in campaigns against Egypt. Whatever the motives actuating him, he is carrying out not only his own purpose but God's. The form of it.—It is an edict of permission rather than of expulsion. It thus becomes a test of the people, and a means of securing for the return only those whose heart has not become too much set upon their prosperity in Babylon. On the part of those who return, and those who help them by their gifts (4), all must be voluntary. Willing hearts are an essential feature of acceptable service of God.

THE RESPONSE (5—11).—The leaders of the return (5) included Zerubbabel, the prince, and Jeshua, the high priest (iii. 2), and with these were a multitude whose hearts God had stirred up (5). These were the whole-hearted, to whom the building of the Lord's house at Jerusalem was more important than a position for themselves in Babylon. They represent the most devoted type of Christians, who forsake all for God. Among those who remained was Daniel, whose position enabled him to help the cause more than if he had returned with them. Others had not the same excuse. Their attachments to Babylon were too strong. They were content with giving liberally to help those who did return. They represent that vast number who will give up their substance to help the work of God, but who do not give themselves. God desires them first, then their gifts (2 Cor. viii. 5). The sacred vessels were taken with them (8—11). In this way Cyrus sought to undo the evil Nebuchadnezzar had done. Some of these vessels were used by Belshazzar at his impious feast (Dan. v. 3). There was no temple in Jerusalem yet; but the people acted in the faith that there would be before long. The decree of Cyrus was itself a pledge that all that God had promised would be fulfilled.

REV. N. C. MACLEAN has been conducting meetings in Reading, Mich. The attendance was large and the interest considerable.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A nine days' mission has been conducted by Rev. John Wakeford at St. Mark's Church, Bexhill.

The Church of England Young Men's Society has now eighty-seven branches, with nearly 20,000 members.

Rev. Wm. Law, Vicar of Rotherham, is suffering from pneumonia. His illness began with a chill caught about ten days ago.

The work in the parish of St. Mark's, Gorton, is in a very rigorous condition, and the Sunday-schools are amongst the largest in Manchester.

The new Dean of St. Asaph intends to present to St. Asaph a library and museum, for which a building is about to be erected near the cathedral.

Three pensions of £100 a year each have been granted by the committee of the Clergy Superannuation Fund since their report to Conference.

The Bishop of Ripon opened last week in Leeds a new home for blind children, just acquired by the Institution for the Blind and for the Deaf and Dumb.

Rev. S. T. and Mrs. Bachert have arrived in England for a change and rest, after the severe strain imposed upon them during the epidemic of cholera at Hamburg.

The Duke of Devonshire has just handed over to the Bishop of Southwell the sum of £2000, to be applied to the funds of the Southwell Diocesan Finance Association.

Rev. W. E. E. M. Bull has resigned Holy Trinity, Mossley, near Congleton, a charge he has held for over twenty-one years, and has accepted the rectory of Radcliffe, Yorkshire.

The sum of £1500 has been raised towards an endowment fund for the new church of St John's, Mosley Common, in the parish of Tyldesley, recently erected at an outlay of £4250.

Archdeacon Crosse, the newly-appointed canon residentiary of Norwich, has undertaken, in addition to his duties at the Cathedral, to take charge of one of the poorer parishes in Norwich.

The Church Army Labour Home for Women is proving a complete success. In addition to receiving systematic religious instruction, the women are occupied with laundry, needle, and home work, for which they are paid according to their industry.

The Yorkshire Evangelical Union has just held its autumnal meetings at Hull. Canon Favell took a tranquil view of the Lincoln judgment, while Canon Bardesley dwelt on the present-day weakness of the pulpit, urging the necessity for more distinct training in the preparation of sermons.

The Bishop of Peterborough, addressing the students at the St. Peter's Training College for Schoolmasters at Peterborough last week, said he would rather trust the teaching to men and women whom he had done his best to inspire with religious feeling, than he would have religious teaching given in an entirely secular spirit. Probably the future of England depended more upon its elementary teachers than any other class of society.

Rev. W. J. Smith, Vicar of St. John's, Kilburn, is starting with the New Year a series of "Lively Saturdays" for the poor in his very poor parish. He has several thousand handbills printed in red ink, with the words "Lively Saturdays" in large type diagonally across the bill. The place and time are in the right-hand lower corner, whilst the evening's entertainment will be printed each week in black on the left-hand upper corner. These evenings will be conducted by the Church Army captain and soldiers.

"I hear," writes the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, "that the new scheme which the Church Association recently put forward as their practical answer to the Lincoln judgment is winning its way very widely amongst Evangelical Churchmen. Many men who would have nothing to do with the Association so long as it indulged in prosecutions are rallying to its support now that it is applying itself to instructing the people. As a result of the meeting at Exeter Hall last week as much as £2500 was subscribed."

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new chapel has been opened at St. Asaph.

Eccles Church Sunday-school reports 469 scholars, with forty-one teachers.

Mr. T. D. Rutherford has accepted the call to Abney Church, Stoke Newington.

Rev. T. G. Jenkyn, Llwynpia, has been able to resume his duties, his health being somewhat restored.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting mission services at St. Austell, Falmouth, and Liskeard, Cornwall.

The bicentenary of the Congregational Church at Eastwood, near Todmorden, is to be commemorated in the spring of next year.

Rev. W. Fox, who for over fourteen years has done good work at Ripponden, has now entered on the pastoral charge of the church at Malton.

Preparations are being made in Wales to commemorate on the 28th of next May the three-hundredth anniversary of the martyrdom of John Penry.

In connection with the Caterham Church a new mission-room and coffee-tavern, costing some £3000, have been recently built at Whyteleaf by Mr. Newberry.

The English Chapel Building Society (Congregational), during the thirty-eight years it has existed) has contributed to the erection of 722 chapels and seventy-three manses.

A new Congregational church has been formed at Rhiwfawr. The membership already numbers 200, and £700 has been obtained towards a chapel which is being erected.

The vacancy at Finsbury Park Congregational Church, caused by the removal of Rev. T. Eynon Davies to Glasgow, is likely to be filled by the appointment of Rev. Llewellyn Parsons, of Bristol.

We hear that as the result of a visit made by Rev. Hopkyn Rees to the Welsh colleges at Bangor, Brecon, and Carmarthen, three students from each college have offered themselves to the L.M.S.

Rev. Samuel Pearson, having completed his ministry in connection with the Lightcliffe Congregational Church, near Halifax, intends entering upon his new pastorate at Tynemouth at the New Year.

The first conference of representatives of the various Pleasant Sunday Afternoon societies in Yorkshire has been held at Belgrave Congregational Chapel, Leeds, under the presidency of Rev. R. Westrope, who recommended that the Sunday work should be followed by Biblical teaching on week nights.

A scheme for providing homes for missionaries on furlough has been inaugurated. It is proposed to have four in London, one on the south coast, one in Oxford or Edinburgh, and one each in Manchester, Bradford, and Bristol. A house for the first three has been secured at Catford. The directors of the London Missionary Society commend the scheme.

Rev. W. Spurgeon, a cousin of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, has accepted the pastorate of Wood-street Church, Cardiff, in succession to the late Rev. R. Watkiss, who founded the church and was its pastor for seventeen years. "The church," writes a correspondent, "is largely a working-man's church, and has a Sunday-evening congregation of nearly 2000."

A new mission-room at Caterham-on-the-Hill, costing £600, has been opened with a series of special services conducted by Revs. W. Heather, M.A., and Josiah Viney. The mission-room has been built by the church in the valley to take the place of an iron room, which was getting into a bad state of repair. The work on the hill has been for many years successfully conducted by Rev. T. L. Smith.

BAPTIST.

At Wynne-road, Brixton, a Y.P.S.C.E. has just been formed.

At Streatham the anniversary, just held, shows steady and cheering progress.

A series of evangelistic services just held at Wem have proved very encouraging.

Mare-street, Hackney, has cleared off a debt which has been burdening the work.

Rev. C. Stanley has accepted an invitation to become the pastor of North Shields Church.

Mr. E. Milnes, of the Pastor's College, has accepted an invitation to New-street, Dudley.

Rev. J. Dodwell, after twenty-three years' good work at Middleton Cheney, has been compelled by ill-health to resign.

Rev. T. R. Lewis, formerly of South Bank, Middlesbrough, has accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Broad Haven.

Rev. J. Russell, who has just settled at Long Preston, was welcomed by the retiring pastor, also by the clergymen of the parish.

The Baptist Church, Westoe-road, South Shields, has invited Mr. W. H. Gorham, of the Evangelisation Society, to become its pastor. He has accepted, and begins his pastorate on January 1.

The church at Jerusalem Llwynpia is to be enlarged so as to accommodate 1400 persons. A few Sundays ago Rev. E. Talfryn Jones baptized eleven, and about 100 have been added during the last few months.

The congregation at Sansome-walk, Worcester, have celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the erection of their chapel by completing new schools and building a mission-hall, costing altogether about £1200.

A missionary conference was held last week at Ferme Park Baptist Church, Hornsey. A numerous attendance listened to interesting and encouraging addresses from Miss Angus (secretary of the Zenana Mission), Mrs. Holman Bentley, and others.

At the anniversary services of the Holland-road Church, West Brighton, held last week, Mr. Congreve gave an account of the work, stating that there are now 311 members, with large Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, and other agencies.

Dr. Pierson presided at the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle branch of Zenana missions, held on Monday week. There was a numerous attendance. The secretary (Mrs. Charles Murrell) submitted the report for the year, from which it appeared that the receipts for this department of missionary effort raised by the church had amounted to £102 3s. 4d.

The Pastor's College Students' Missionary Association held its annual meeting in the College on Friday week. Dr. A. T. Pierson spoke on the great need of the heathen world. Rev. Dr. Swanson, of China, spoke of his work among the Chinese, and the great need for workers in that vast empire; Rev. D. J. East, of Jamaica, of the work accomplished on that island; and Rev. J. W. Ewing, B.A., on the dark condition of heathen people and of the adaptability of the Gospel to that need.

METHODIST.

A new mission has been formed at Evercreech.

Miss Clapsham has conducted a successful mission at Harniston, Lincolnshire.

The Independent Methodist congregation in Noble-street, Bolton, has decided to erect a new chapel.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has been urged to go to New York, but has declined, feeling his work is in this land.

The Independent Methodist school-chapel which has been erected at Radcliffe has been formally opened by Mr. R. Lees, of Wigan.

A new Wesleyan Methodist chapel has been opened at Sparrowpit, a village in the heart of the High Peak. The entire cost has been £700.

The South London Mission propose to give 500 hot breakfasts during this month and next at Locksfields and Southwark to the poor children.

A new chapel belonging to the Methodist New Connexion denomination, with a seating capacity of 200, was opened last week at Ainsworth, near Bury.

A Christian Workers' Convention, held at Sheffield, has been considering methods and organisation in connection with getting hold of the outsiders and inducing them to attend chapel.

The Christmas party for the lonely has again been arranged by Mr. Nix, of the West London Mission. It will be held in Cleveland Hall on the 26th, beginning at noon with a good Christmas dinner.

Miss Wilson, of Carlisle, has conducted a three weeks' successful mission at Dilston-road, Newcastle. Large congregations gathered night after night, and on each of the four Sundays the chapel was crowded.

A memorial is to be erected in Barking-road Wesleyan Chapel to the late Rev. Alexander McAulay, ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, and for some years general secretary of the Home Missionary Society.

It has been decided by the Primitive Methodist General Missionary Committee that the quarterly meetings of the Home Missions, which hitherto have been held at Surrey Chapel, shall in future be held in various parts of the country.

On Wednesday week a number of ministers met Rev. Charles Garrett, to say God-speed to a young missionary who was leaving the port of Liverpool. The missionary was Rev. H. J. Ellis, of Windsor, who, after the usual training at Richmond, has been appointed to a station in Western Africa. Mr. Ellis is expected to occupy new ground, and he started with a brave heart on his heroic mission.

A most interesting meeting was held on Saturday week in the Brunswick Chapel, Liverpool. The meeting was a convention of local preachers and ministers, arranged by the Wesleyan Council. Papers were read by Mr. Kelly, of Rock Ferry, and by Rev. Macdonald Munro, and were followed by an animated and helpful discussion. There was an interval for tea and conversation, and the proceedings were brought to a close by a communion service. This was felt to be a most profitable and helpful meeting.

An interesting experiment is being tried at Gateshead Fell Chapel by Rev. W. H. Allen, with a view to increase the attractiveness of the weeknight service. He has issued a syllabus, very neatly got up, announcing a series of Bible readings from the Acts of the Apostles. The members of the congregation take their Bibles and join in the readings.

The Wesleyan Methodist Council has had, on behalf of Ancoats and Hulme, a sum of £1000 placed at its disposal for aggressive work. It is hoped this will be but the initiation of an important aggressive evangelistic movement in these densely populated districts.

Rev. Dr. Rigg, president of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, has addressed a pastoral letter to the Methodists of Great Britain, calling their attention to the growing laxity in the observance of the ancient and impressive watch night and covenant and services, expressing the earnest hope that, as the season is now approaching for the annual observance of these historic occasions, both ministers and people throughout the country will unite in making them seasons of spiritual refreshment and blessing. The president refers to the recent yearly accessions to British Methodism as small, but expresses the opinion that they would be vastly increased if more attention were given to these unique spiritual observances.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Letters show that the Presbyterian Church at Rangoon is doing good work.

At Church End, Finchley, a new mission hall is being built in preparation for the church ere long to be erected.

The meetings in Liverpool on the eve of the departure of Dr. Murray Cairns for medical mission work in China proved remarkably enthusiastic and encouraging.

Another Sunday-school Convention is to be held on Jan. 24, in Belgrave Church, when Mr. R. Whyte will speak on "Sunday-schools: how far they have failed, and why."

Rev. W. S. Swanson, well known amongst English Presbyterians, has been offered the position of minister of the church at Penang, Straits Settlements, but has declined the offer.

While Rev. R. E. Welsh, of Brondesbury, is in South Africa for his health, he is preaching in Port Elizabeth in a church the minister of which, Rev. J. T. Lloyd, is in turn preaching for Mr. Welsh at Brondesbury.

The Sultan of Johore, who some time ago gave the Presbyterian Mission land for a mission-house and schools, has now added 1000 dols. of the 2000 dols. the buildings will cost. This is a happy testimony to the worth of the mission work from a quarter where appreciation is peculiarly welcome.

The Presbytery of London (North) devoted last week [illegible] and serious consideration to the difficulties experienced by the ministers of small congregations in working-class districts. It was fully admitted some special help must be rendered, and a strong committee was appointed to inquire and report on the matter.

Two offers have been made, one of £100 and another of £25, to complete the sum of £1000, towards which £772 has been obtained, for the purpose of providing scholarships before the close of the year in the Hebrew and other Semitic languages, in connection with the Elmslie Memorial Fund. The scholarships will be open to students in the Baptist, Independent, and Presbyterian colleges.

SALVATION ARMY.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker is seriously ill.

A great campaign just concluded in Christiana has been attended by much blessing.

General Booth has had large and enthusiastic meetings in Bristol, Weymouth, and Salisbury.

A great congress, led by Mr. Ballington Booth, has just been held in the Carnegie Music Hall, New York.

Col. Ruhani has lately completed a ten weeks' tour in South India, finishing up at Cape Comorin with a conference attended by 6000 people.

The Marechale, interviewed by the Eclair on her expulsion from Switzerland, stated that she had been expelled five times, but from two cantons only—Geneva and Neuchâtel.

Rev. F. Daustini Cremer, rector of Keighley Parish Church, Yorkshire, invited the local S.A. corps to his church on Sunday week afternoon, took up a collection for the Darkest England Scheme, and concluded a discourse full of catholicity and goodwill by saying, "I pray God that you may never lose that missionary zeal which is your honour and your glory."

THE SHELTERING HOME,

MYRTLE STREET, LIVERPOOL.

ESTABLISHED TWENTY YEARS AGO TO SAVE POOR GIRLS AND BOYS.

100 Rescued during the past three months. After training, testing, outfitting, &c., they are placed in homes and situations in Canada. 3,500 from this Home now happily situated in Canada. Supervision regularly carried on. 95 per cent. DOING WELL.

Many in distress outside waiting to be helped.

£10 will Save One Precious Life!

"Happy is he who assisteth the poor in their troubles."

Girls also from 12 to 16 years of age, of sound health, and good moral character, are prepared for life in Canada, where there are great advantages at present time for the settlement of girls. Girls receive instruction in practical cooking, washing, ironing, and cutting out. Widows advised and helped continually.

5,000 of the poorest Children annually have a grand Christmas Treat in St. George's Hall.

Superintendent, Mrs. LOUISA BIRT.

TRAMPS, CRIMINALS, INEBRIATES,

AND DESERVING UNEMPLOYED RECLAIMED BY MEANS OF THE NUMEROUS SMALL LABOUR HOMES OF

THE CHURCH ARMY SOCIAL SCHEME.

A WORKING MAN'S MISSION TO THE MASSES. THE BOTTOM STEP OF THE CHURCH'S LADDER.

w can I help them? Send them to the nearest Church Army Labour Home, and pray for their Conversion.

N'T pay their fares. Don't give them money. If you supply food see them eat it. If possible make them work for it. Never give money in the streets, unless you know the person well. Old clothes sent to us, will often help a hopeless outcast, when he has stood our labour-test, into permanent employment. we send you a sack in which to collect them? We never give clothes away, but sell them at nominal rates, thus placing a premium on self-help. Look in see our homes at any hour. Casual Wards and Workhouses are regularly searched by our Evangelists. Convicts are received direct from the Gaol Chaplains. y are saved from their "First Committal." It is heartrending to have to turn away really helpable persons. Do assist us if you can. Will you become an ciate, agreeing to pray once a week for this work, and to collect not less than 5s. yearly? Everyone, of however slender means, can help in e way if they will. You might go to a Labour Home, make the acquaintance of one or more of the tested "Brothers" or "Sisters," try to find them loyment, and then keep in touch afterwards by correspondence.

£35,000 required Yearly for maintenance and extension of the 24 Institutions in different parts of England and Abroad.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

Appeals.

A Plea from Ireland.—Colonel Kinloch writes that the Protestant school-house in Ballycumber has fallen into ruins, and the children are forced to attend the Roman Catholic schools. He asks £100 to put the old schoolhouse into serviceable condition. After the school has been set going and kept going for three months, the National Board will help. The poverty of the place is so great that the people themselves can do nothing. Communications should be addressed, Col. Kinloch, Ballycumber House, Ballycumber, King's Co., Ireland.

Notices.

Hastings.—Rev. F. B. Meyer can be seen at Christ Church Westminster Bridge-road, each Monday from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. Friends coming from a distance would do well to inform him of their intention, so that there may be no mistake.

THE LONDON FEMALE GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

Founded at Pentonville A.D. 1807, for the RESCUE, RECLAMATION, and PROTECTION of BETRAYED and FALLEN WOMEN, from all parts of the United Kingdom, with IMMEDIATE and FREE ADMISSION to APPLICANTS. Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President: The Lord KINNAIRD. Chairman: D. MARSHALL LANG, Esq.

TEN THOUSAND Friendless and Fallen Young Women have been welcomed to these HOMES, shielded from evil, instructed in the way of righteousness, and freely supplied with food, clothing, education, and residence for eighteen months. Persons interested in Rescue Work are invited to send cases.

SIX THOUSAND have been placed in service or restored to friends; very many have given clear evidence of true conversion; and a large number continue to enjoy the loving supervision of the Christian Workers of the TRAINING HOME.

THOUSANDS OF CASES unrecorded have also been temporarily helped and sheltered. The Annual Report contains particulars of the great good accomplished, and will be sent on application.

FUNDS ARE MOST URGENTLY NEEDED

To maintain this Christ-like work, and will be thankfully received by the Bankers Barclay, Bevan, Ransom, & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C., & 1, Pall Mall East, S.W. and by Mr. W. EDWIN PAGE, Secretary.

Testamentary BEQUESTS are earnestly solicited.

THE CHRISTIAN BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

Originally Instituted in 1843.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Rev. the Bishop of Bedford.

This Unique Society has been in existence 50 years, and is worthy of all confidence. All the money received is devoted to the Blind. It has no office expenses, and its Secretary receives no salary. It is doing more for the Needy Blind than any other Society. It only helps the poorest, those whose incomes are less than £20 a year if single, or £30 if married. The great bulk of its Pensioners have not an income of 2d. per day. For many years past no deserving Candidate has been kept waiting more than a year before permanent help in the form of a Pension has been rendered. During the last two years 16 Pensioners have been elected, and 69 have had their Pensions doubled. At the present time it has 40 Pensioners on its books living in various parts of Great Britain and Ireland.

50 Candidates seeking Election, 3 of whom are over 80, and 10 over 60 years of age Who will Help those Aged, Blind, and Destitute Ones? Who will brighten thei Christmas and New Year?

CASE OF CONSUMPTION IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

Mr. A—— writes:—"If you care to print the enclosed without name and address, you are at liberty so to do. Please send me a copy of the Christian World in which it may be inserted, and some of your valuable books on Consumption. I have recommended your medicine, and it has done much good."

(The writer gives a very special reason for not wishing his name to appear. Although it is our bounden duty to do all we can, by our personal testimony, to encourage our fellowmen who may be sceptical to that which may save their lives, there is a limit and an exception when our personal interest may be seriously affected thereby.)

"Three years ago in the spring, when in England, I suffered from severe cough, blood spitting, night sweats, and what appeared a general breaking-up of the constitution. The matter expectorated became heavier, thicker, and of greenish colour. One of the most eminent medical men in England told me I was very bad. I became alarmingly ill—so weak and haggard I was an object of pity to all. I read of you in the Christian World, and commenced your treatment. For some time there was no improvement, until I noticed myself gaining a little flesh, and my face assuming its natural complexion again. Night sweats then decreased. Finally the cough and expectoration went off. I recovered my strength so that by September I could take long walks, and climb the hills with enjoyment. Since then I have sailed for Australia. I always keep your medicine, and shall do my best to recommend it here."

Allen & Hanburys' "PERFECTED" Cod-liver Oil

"Is as nearly tasteless as Cod-liver Oil can be."—Lancet. "No nauseous eructations follow after it is swallowed."—Medical Press. "Has almost the delicacy of Salad Oil."—British Medical Journal. "A pharmaceutical product which is in its way unrivalled."—London Medical Record. "It is a great boon to get such an oil."—Practitioner.

Manufactured at ALLEN & HANBURYS' Norwegian Factories, from FRESH and SELECTED livers ONLY. It can be borne and digested by the most delicate. It is the only Oil which does not "repeat," and for these reasons the most efficacious kind in use.

In Capsuled Bottles ONLY, at 1/4, 2/6, 4/9, and 9/-.

Bynin LIQUID MALT, is another valuable ailment in consumption and wasting diseases, being not only a highly concentrated and nutritious food, but a powerful aid to digestion, and is a useful adjunct to Cod-liver Oil. The Lancet writes: "A highly diastasic Malt Extract. One ounce of BYNIN will digest perfectly one pound of starch. This is a most favourable result, and, coupled with the fluidity and pleasant flavour, renders this preparation a most valuable one."

In Capsuled Bottles ONLY, at 1s. 9d. and 3s. each. Sold Everywhere.

BRIDGE OF HOPE MISSION

And RATCLIFF HIGHWAY REFUGE.

28, Betts Street, St. George's-in-the-East, London, E.

ABSOLUTELY FREE FOR EAST-END GIRLS.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE MISSION has now been carried on for nearly fourteen years in one of the Poorest Districts in the East of London. The work is especially among YOUNG WOMEN and LITTLE GIRLS, and is both RESCUE and PREVENTIVE. The doors are Open Night and Day. The various branches of the Bridge of Hope are:—

(1) THE REFUGE. (2) THE NIGHT SHELTER. (3) THE LUCY HOME. (4) AGNES COTTAGE. And for the work among the Children: (5) BRIDGE HOUSE, LONDON. (6) ELIZABETH HOUSE, CLAPTON. (7) REGENT'S PARK COTTAGE, LEIGH. (8) THE BAIRNS' COTTAGE, HIGHGATE, and (9) THE HAVEN, TICEHURST.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE has a very special claim upon the support of the Christian public. It is quite UNDENOMINATIONAL. Not only are girls from the neighbourhood taken in, and workers all around in the various East End Missions helped with their difficult cases, but applications to receive Young Girls come from all parts of England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland.

To give to the BRIDGE OF HOPE is to help those who try to help themselves. The young women in the Refuge earned during last year £622 by Laundry Work, Knitting, and Needlework. It is for the very young girls and children born into evil surroundings, and so circumstanced that, humanly speaking, if not rescued and saved NOW there is no other chance in life but for them to swell the numbers of lost girls on the streets, that we now plead.

HELP US TO SAVE THESE LITTLE GIRLS!

The money given goes very directly to the benefit of those for whom it is sent. There is no doubt as to the economy with which the work is carried on. At the present time our need is very great.

MARY H. STEER.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

Through the death of friends and other causes, support has entirely failed for in poor and necessitous parts of London, and amongst special classes.

42 DISTRICTS

Unless new friends are found to replace those lost to the Society, the Committee will very reluctantly be compelled to remove these Missionaries.

The Committee are prepared to continue the Missionary on any poor district if the sum of

£50 per Annum

is guaranteed.

Will the Readers of "The Christian" support one of these Missionaries?

Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq.,

or by the Secretaries, T. S. HUTCHINSON, M.A., ROBERT DAWSON, B.A.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

GENERAL MISSION WORK. WORK AMONG CHILDREN. PRISONERS' MISSION AND HOME. BOYS' HOMES AND PREVENTIVE WORK. WOMEN'S HOMES AND RESCUE WORK.

The Superintendent is much grieved to say that owing to the great scarcity of donations, the above many-sided work is sorely hampered.

Funds are urgently needed to meet the outlay at the present time.

Who will help us?

Contributions will be most gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the Superintendent, Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C.

The Annual Report is now ready, and will be forwarded free upon application to the Superintendent.

LONDON CABMEN'S MISSION

Is £500 in debt. Who will help us to remove this burden that we may carry on this much-needed work amongst the 16,000 Cabmen of London?

Smallest contributions thankfully received by the Superintendent,

JOHN DUPEE,

165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.; or by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, office of The Christian.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

PATRON: Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

LORD BRASSEY has, with great munificence, promised £5,000 towards the £30,000 needed for a carefully elaborated scheme to cope with the evils afflicting seamen in the Port of London; including a Missions to Seamen Church, Institute, Gymnasium, Officers' Rooms, Class Rooms, Adult Schools, and Coffee Bar, etc., in one block, with four smaller branch Seamen's Institutes, to be worked by two chaplains and five experienced readers. Besides the above £30,000, about £3,000 a-year additional will be needed for maintenance of staff and buildings in East of London.

COMMANDER H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, R.N., K.G., is president of the London Funds Committee of the Missions to Seamen to raise the necessary moneys. It includes, amongst others, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Mayor, the Prime Warden of the Fishmongers, the First Lord of the Admiralty, and many leading shipowners and merchants, etc. Offertories and drawing-room meetings, etc., are solicited. Subscriptions and contributions for the General Fund, and for the Special "London Fund of the Mission to Seamen," should be sent to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom, and Co., Bankers, 1, Pall Mall East, or 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to the General Secretary, Commander William Dawson, R.N., the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

FUNDS GREATLY NEEDED to extend the work at this critical period of Ireland's special wants. Irish-speaking Scripture Readers are sent where required, and the work is carried on in a spirit of love and not of controversy. Reports and Occasional Papers to be had free from the Secretary, Capt. J. KEARNEY WHITE. Offices: 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin, and No. 9, Paternoster-row, London, where Donations may be sent; or to Rev. ALFRED G. WILCOX, 28, Rectory-grove, Clapham, S.W.; JOSEPH LENG, Esq., 29, The Gardens, Peckham Rye, S.E., Hon. Secretaries for London; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Mr. D. L. MOODY says:—"Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a 'man mighty in the Scriptures,' saturated with Bible facts and truths, and possessed with a yearning desire to help others."

New and Original Life of Mr. SPURGEON.

The Prince of Preachers:

A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, AND A TRIBUTE.

By Rev. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

The Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON says of this Book:—

"I have been happily conscious that the book is not a mere narration of oft-told facts (with some fiction) and worn-out anecdotes. The 'Sketch' is good; the 'Portraiture' is better; the 'Tribute' is best of all. Right glad am I that Mr. Douglas has succeeded so eminently in his difficult but congenial task."

Dear Friends,

I most earnestly solicit your help on behalf of the young children under my care and the poor mothers who so bravely fight life's battle against such fearful odds, and I hope that you will by your generous aid enable me to continue this work of mercy, as any withdrawal of help at this season would inflict much suffering; but I trust that I shall not so close my twenty-second year of labour which has brightened so many lives that are cast amid the shadows

Yours in the service of the helpless,

Nature's Healing Power.

The most successful methods of curing disease more upon the healing power of Nature than medicinal remedies, and when the natural influ of Magnetism is allied with the recuperative forc the system, it energises the whole organism successfully. The results accruing from its clearly prove that Nature is the healer, and tha aiding Nature we effect a restoration as certainl water when applied to the root vitalises every br and leaf of a drooping plant. The general result Odo-Magnetic Treatment establish its claims first place amongst Nature's remedies. It penetr and permeates every atom and tissue of the li organism, every deep-seated gland; but it ca injure the finest capillaries in the most delicate m brane. Every corpuscle of the blood is impregn with its vitalising influence; consequently e organ of the body is simultaneously energised. influence on the nervous system is so subtle an tangible that it quickens life into vigorous exer and gives resolution of purpose to concentrate mind upon chosen subjects of study, so harmoni the mental and physical as to restore the consc possession of a sound mind in a sound body.

Rev. JOHN ATKINS, 33, Wilson-road, Birchfi Birmingham, May 10, 1892.

"I am glad you retain my name as a refere —please continue so to do. Any patient that apply to me will get the highest recommendat I obtained a life benefit from your Treatment, a am stronger now than I was years ago when I app to you. But for your treatment of my case, I sh have been dead and buried long ago. I cannot more, but this is true."

Mr. W. MARTIN (Evangelist), 142, Canterbu road, Kilburn, N.W., November 11, 1892.

"I shall only be too glad, for the sake of all sufferers, if you still use my name as a referee continue to advise any who complain to me of t suffering to consult you.

As I told you four years ago, I found more re from your Treatment than from all the medicin had taken for years. I do not know whether it from the Appliance or not, but this I can say, I a different man altogether since I had it, and altho I am not wearing it at present, because I don't n it, I would not part with it for anything; in fa look upon it as an old friend."

Mr. R. SOMERVILLE, Mansfield Mains, N Cumnock, Ayrshire, November 14, 1892.

"I have great pleasure in writing to tell you of immense benefit I have derived from your Treatm When I consulted you I had been suffering especi from a relaxed throat, indigestion, nervous weakn and rheumatism in my arms and shoulders, follow an attack of Influenza, and I was altogether unfi to endure even moderate fatigue, or to walk any tance without resting. Medical Treatment had d no good, and I tried the seaside with no better resu I now gratefully acknowledge that I have b relieved from all these complaints; my throa quite well and my nervousness gone. I nothing of the pains in my shoulders, and I can attend to my work as usual. I am not wearing Appliance at present, because I don't need it, b shall put it on during the coming winter as a pre tative against those complaints, our climate being very cold."

Sufferers of every class are cordially invited to their cases before Mr. B. Copson Garratt, 16, F bury-square, London, E.C., who will be pleased advise gratuitously in any instance.

any friends of the poor in East London mourn over the decease of the popular istrate, Mr. Montagu Williams. We do know what his religious tenets were, but he inly endeared himself to the poverty- ken and the distressed by his humane sympathetic administration of the law in police-courts. He recognised that poverty ot necessarily a crime, and he showed pity in practical ways.

A great United Temperance Demonstration to welcome Miss Frances E. Willard, now on a visit to this country, is intended to be held in the large Exeter Hall, Strand, London, on Monday evening, January 9. In her capacity as vice-president of the W.W.C.T.U., Lady Henry Somerset invites temperance people of every rank and name to unite in this demonstration, that it may be a memorable occasion, as showing Miss Willard the extent and depth of affectionate regard entertained for her. Many eminent speakers will address the meeting.

The Christmas bells have once more rung out their joyous refrain, "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth to men of goodwill." A most unwelcome note of discord came on Christmas eve from that distressful country, Ireland. Without magnifying the national import of what may only be the act of a few reckless desperadoes, this dynamite outrage in Dublin brings once more into relief the simmering discontent that has so long prevailed in the sister isle. As history unfolds itself, it becomes more and more plain that mere political expedients, however ingenious and well meant, will never bring social or national peace to Ireland.

While, therefore, we mourn over the convulsions and uphaveals that have marked the political history of Ireland of late years, we rejoice unfeignedly that the land is now passing through a time of crisis in its religious evolution. The priests are, no doubt, doing their worst in order to keep the masses of the people in servile, spiritual bondage, but the Spirit of God is lifting up a standard against the devices of a false faith. We would fain believe that through all this variance and strife, God is making it possible for the people of Ireland to work out their own salvation, and to enter into that all-embracing freedom with which Christ makes his people free. Let there be constant prayer that the Gospel campaigns throughout Ireland which have been planned for the opening months of 1893 may make it a time to be remembered with gratitude in generations to come. What God has been doing at Ballymena (v. p. 16) He can do all through the land.

In The Daily Chronicle of Monday there is an East End story of "Starving at Christmas," that ill accords with the "festive" season. It tells of a woman, in the pains of childbirth, so poor that she was lying on a heap of straw with nothing to cover her. There was no food, and no furniture, in the house. Small wonder that the new-born babe died when only five hours old. There must be something terribly awry with our system of poor relief when such things are possible in wealthy and "Christian" England. The coroner made a very suggestive statement that we hope the Poor Law Commission, which is soon to sit, will not overlook:—

> According to our poor law a man must tumble into the gutter before he can be picked up. In Germany they try to prevent a man tumbling into the gutter. It is a question whether that is not the cheapest in the end; it is certainly more humane.

At length the report has been published of the Earl of Onslow's Committee, formed for the purpose of investigating the manner in which the money subscribed for the "Darkest England" Scheme has been expended. The inquiry was conducted with judicial calmness, the Committee being presided over by Sir Henry James. The finding has been such as cannot but assist the social work of the Salvation Army. Subject to a trifling qualification, the methods employed in the expenditure of the money are declared to have been of a businesslike, economical, and prudent character. The criticism of enemies of the work is answered by the statement that the accounts have been kept in a proper and clear manner. It is, however, maintained, and we think rightly, that adequate legal safeguards do not at present exist to prevent the misapplication of property.

The recommendations of the Committee have had the prompt consideration of General Booth, who, in a published letter, says:—

> I fully recognise the wisdom of the request that the over-the-sea colony should be at once established, and the moment I am placed in a financial position to carry out this part of the undertaking I shall do so. As to the suggestion that further safeguards should be provided for the conservation of the property in the future, I can only at present say that, while anxious to afford every possible security to this end, I cannot think it wise to make any sudden or serious changes.

The General proceeds to appeal for enlarged support, in order that the experiment may be completed. He says:—

> To meet our present liabilities £70,000 is required. Deducting from this sum £5,000, which we expect as a legacy, there remains a deficit of £65,000. Of this amount £10,000 has already been promised, and I now appeal for the remainder. When entrusted with the sum necessary to inaugurate the Scheme, I had, of course, no option but to commence the work. I had, however, stated in the most precise terms, and in the most public manner, that £30,000 a year would be required to maintain and develop it. That estimate has proved very nearly accurate. I cannot wisely or safely go further unless I am assured of the support of those who desire that ultimate success of the Scheme, of which I am as confident as ever.

Certainly this sum should be placed at the disposal of General Booth; but we trust it will represent additional public generosity, and not be made up of contributions withdrawn from old and approved philanthropic agencies.

With regard to the gambling fever that has received such an impetus of late, a well-timed protest has appeared in The Echo, which goes straight to the point:—

> Before long there would not have been a workshop or a school and scarcely a home unaffected by the malady. But it is rank hypocrisy to strike at gambling practices like the one recently exposed and rebuked, and leave other and grosser practices untouched. Boys who pitch and toss on kerbstones, men who bet on the streets, are hauled up and fined, but the big bettors, including princes, dukes, marquises, countesses, and lords and ladies by the hundred, may bet on grand stands, and none dare to make them afraid. We have one law for the rich and another for the poor. That fact is certain, general, palpable, and defiant, and reflects deep discredit on us as a nation.

Many of those who speak and write glibly upon temperance questions have little or no knowledge of what life really is in the lower grades of society. An experience of the tenements and the slums in which so many myriads of our fellow creatures are condemned to spend their shortened lives is necessary to all those who would deal with the topics bearing upon the intemperance and improvidence of the poorer working classes. With that experience there would come the pity and the sympathy which only too often are absent from the utterances of those who would be pained if they knew how unjust they are to the people who are frequently as unfortunate as they are miserable.

A few days ago the first sod was cut of a railway to be constructed from the port of Haifa, near Mount Carmel, through Galilee to Damascus. One cannot but feel some regret at the idea of Palestine being thus modernised; at the same time, this opening up of the country will, in addition to many other benefits, have the effect of forwarding the progress of Christianity.

A Year's Retrospect.

We are too closely related, as yet, to the year about to close to furnish that comparative review of its chequered history which may one day be forthcoming from the pen of the philosophic and more aloof observer. All we can essay about it now is the utterance of a few heart-words.

The year opened darkly, for a Prince had fallen, and the Royal sorrow, reflected widely in the nation, was the prelude of a year which has been shadowed by exceptional losses. The reaper Death has been busy; and many have been reaped from time whom, in the poor judgment of man, the Church and the world could ill spare. "Sufficient" unto the year as "unto the day is the evil thereof"; sufficient, but not, in a better judgment than ours, more than sufficient.

We think of Charles Haddon Spurgeon, "The Prince of Preachers," the students' and orphans' friend, who, from a youth, stood in the blaze of publicity with untarnished reputation and undiminished acceptance—now with God. We think of Principal Cairns, a man of solid learning, simple spirit, and sturdy faith, who for so many years had upheld the best traditions of the Scottish pulpit. And we think of other standard-bearers taken from this mortal scene, among whom we may mention Graham Wilmot Brooke, Charles Graham, Dr. Donald Fraser, Dr. Eustace R. Conder, Dr. Hanna, Jackson Wray, Dr. Allon, the veteran Thomas Cooper, Gawin Kirkham, John MacGregor, and others in whom, it may be said, the Church militant is made to feel that, "Her blessings brighten as they take their flight."

The year has been darkly set. But all things are of God. He removes his workmen, but carries on his work.

During 1892, the clock of time, so far as missionary enterprise is concerned, has by no means stood still. Perhaps this year, being the centenary year of the Baptist Missionary Society, the pioneer of modern missions, has had something to do with the greatly increased scope and activity in this direction. In our judgment, however, the main secret of the Missionary Revival lies in a better understanding of the "marching orders" of the Church's Leader. Not that those orders were ever ambiguous: but now, more than heretofore, the Christian conscience is being aroused to their binding nature, and is seeking to pay back to the heathen world the evangelic debt, the sense of which made Paul and others world-wide missionaries in their day.

In Africa, notwithstanding troubles in Uganda, where we are glad to believe the British flag will not be lowered, there has been marked advance. American Missions on the Congo have had a Pentecostal reaping-time. Baptist missions there have likewise made marked headway. The French Society of Evangelical Missions of Paris has scored a brilliant success in Basutoland, and also in that darkest part of Africa, the Barotsi valley, described by the lion-hearted Coillard as degraded, if that be possible, beneath the level of Sodom itself. Altogether there is much in the Dark Continent of Africa to cheer us in this the year of our Lord 1892. The most difficult post, doubtless, is that held by the North Africa Mission; for Islam is an obdurate foe. But Jesus is Victor, and "by fasting and prayer" the Crescent shall surely wane before the Cross.

Evidence is forthcoming of a more solid and satisfactory work among the young this year. The mission of amusement seems receding, and a widespread effort is being made to win and utilise the young people for Christ. We earnestly trust this movement will gather strength in the coming year. It is undeniable that matters had assumed a most threatening look. The desire to cater for the young had wrecked the peace and spirituality of many churches. It was, indeed, time that a halt should be called. We are glad that worldly temporising is being abandoned, and by means of "Christian Bands" and the "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour" the work among the young has been placed on distinctly spiritual lines.

A notable feature of the year has been the evangelistic work, in the three kingdoms, of Messrs. Moody and McNeill, sustained by many consecrated helpers. Truly, a great door and effectual has been opened to these ambassadors of Christ, and God is to be praised for the rich harvest of souls accruing from their testimony. Dr. Pentecost's mission in India is also a record of loving, strenuous, and successful labour in the great harvest field of the world.

Outside the Church, the condition of things does not improve, nor can we say that within it, taking a broad view, the prospect grows less dark. The estrangement between employers and employed has been accentuated this year. Every believer, having been reconciled to God, should be a reconciling force in the present strained condition of society.

The agricultural interest is now in extremis. It is to be hoped that in the multitude of physicians some amelioration will be found, and that farming operations may be successful in netting something better than deficits. A noteworthy difference has been pointed out between the productiveness of farms of the same character, where one landlord has been a practical farmer and has reasonably co-operated with his tenant, and the other has not.

Through the fall of the "Liberator" and some other investment societies, multitudes of our most industrious and deserving citizens have been impoverished and, in many cases, brought to parish relief. There is but one safe bank—the bank of heaven; but one enduring kingdom—the kingdom not yet set up, and of which the Ancient of Days is king. The year has rudely shaken confidence manward. Let it the more endear to us confidence Christward, which can never be misplaced and never know excess.

The year is memorable for Rabbi Lichtenstein's secession from Judaism, after years of testimony for Christ; also renewed Gospel inquiry among the Jews. Side by side with this, we note the continuance of the hateful and ruthless persecution of the Jews in Russia and Roumania. Our brethren the Stundists are even more bitterly ground down under the unsparing heel of the Muscovite Church. How long, O Lord, how long wilt Thou restrain thy delivering hand? But, though Thou dost restrain it, Thou art surely near with thy supporting grace!

The signs of the times show that we are in the lull before the storm. The armed peace-footing of the nations of Europe is too great to be borne for long. Meanwhile Socialism, with a distinctly infidel mission, is eating into the heart of society: and lawlessness is gathering courage and feeling its way, in the presence of a weakened executive, to power. The clay period is upon us, the result of the royal prerogative, all through the Times of the Gentiles, not having been exercised in obedience to God or in righteousness to man.

Meanwhile the Christian's duty is clear. His mission is not to conciliate man, but God; to preach the Word; to man the lifeboat in faith; to stand in the old paths a witness for the Lord. We must keep to Scripture as an inspired whole, and to the Gospel of Christ as a sovereign specific for human ills; and if the times darken, if there be distress of nations, if many depart from the faith, if all things around do betoken a crisis, we know that "He that shall come will come and will not tarry," and that when these things begin to come to pass, it is ours who are Christ's to look up and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh.

James Douglas.

The Week of Prayer.

Christian readers generally will concur in the opinion that the divine blessing upon a prayer meeting seems to be in measure—a great measure—connected with the state of heart of those who attend it. If we ourselves are unexercised respecting the particular subject for the day, we may utter, or conceive in, words which are in themselves good and true, yet very little comes of it afterward. We go our way; we have heard the address, we have joined in the petitions; we rather enjoyed the meeting; and then, it may be, we relapse into the condition or spirit in which we were before. On the other hand, if we were concerned deeply about the special subject; if we had considered it in its bearing upon our own condition and responsibilities as individuals, as members of families, as members of churches, as part of the race of mankind; and if, in consequence, desires after God in this particular matter had been awakened or re-quickened beforehand—then the exercised mind and heart are prepared for the definite prayer of faith, and we close the united assembly in hope and earnest expectation.

Let us then seek the Lord previously, and alone, in earnest supplication—shall I suggest with confession?—asking for preparedness of spirit and of conscience. Then will the full shadow of his wings (see the Psalmist's experience) afford great delight, true shelter, sweet calmness, deep joy. For he that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. And such an one, richer or poorer, a leader or unknown, is fitted for the Master's use; and his or her mere personal attendance becomes important for this also, because of the real spiritual influence which is brought into the assembly where he or she may come.

Where it can be so arranged, if the Christian friend in charge of the meetings in any locality would call together to a preliminary prayer-meeting those who are likely to take any leading part in rule, address, or public prayer, the main object might be greatly promoted.

A Friend.

BOSTON, U.S.—Rev. F. L. Chapell is doing a great work at the head of the Boston Baptist Training School, of which Dr. A. J. Gordon is president. The school has about fifty day students and seventy-five evening students. The scope of the studies, the details of the instruction, the methods of the work indicate fidelity and conscientiousness on the part of both teachers and pupils.

BUCKHURST HILL.—A few years ago a party of Lowestoft fishermen preached the Gospel here, with much acceptance and good result. Meetings have been arranged for the first fortnight in January, which these men will again conduct, in the meeting-room, Buckhurst Hill. They will begin at 3 and 7 p.m. Prayer is asked, that the blessing may be as in time past, and more abundant.

Christian Union

ESSENTIAL TO

The World's Evangelisation.

The pieces of pipe lying on the roadside are intended to convey gas or water into our houses; but they are useless for the purpose until they are joined together. A fishing-rod cannot be used until its parts are united. The largest and most exquisitely designed and constructed telescope, the product of the experience and skill of centuries, is only a cumbersome piece of machinery, unless it be "fitly joined together."

The Church is the highest organism ever called into being by the love and wisdom and power of God. He created man in his own image, but, as the tabernacle and the temple were but copies of the heavenly things themselves, so the Adam of Paradise was but the earthly copy of "the Church, which is Christ's body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

This wondrous mechanism was devised to make the Gospel known to all the nations. But it could not do so until endued with power from on high. The promise of the ascending Saviour—"Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me...unto the uttermost part of the earth"—could not be fulfilled until they were all with one accord in one place—perfectly joined together, in the same mind, and in the same judgment.

The two chief thoughts and purposes which are exercising the people of God to-day are Christian Union and the Great Commission. Fifty years ago two remarkable works were published under these very titles. They were written in the above order by the author of the prize essay on "Mammon," but by the malice and craft of the devil, the accuser of the brethren, their publication was stayed, and they sank into forgetfulness. The spirit in which "Christian Union" was conceived is manifested in the concluding words of the author's preface:—

"The writer can truly aver to those of every community whom alone he desires to see united—"the faithful in Christ Jesus"—that while, on the one hand, he has not knowingly omitted a single sentence merely for the sake of gratifying one party, he has, on the other, introduced a word for the mere purpose of criminating any other party. So that if, in any instance, it should be his lot to reap division where his only aim has been to sow unity, he will regard it as an additional reason to appeal from earth to heaven, and in the appropriate language of the Collect for Unity say:—

"O God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, our only Saviour, the Prince of Peace: give us grace seriously to lay to heart the great dangers we are in by our unhappy divisions. Take away all hatred and prejudice, and whatsoever else may hinder us from godly union and concord: that as there is but one body, and one Spirit, and one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all, so we may henceforth be all knit in one heart and of one soul, united in one holy bond of truth and peace, of faith and charity, and may with one mind and one mouth glorify Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The tone of the prize essay on "The Great Commission" may be gathered from the following extracts:—

"The constitution of the Christian Church supposes that every individual member is prepared to take his part as an agent for Christ. It does not allow the silent to fold his arms and transfer his duty to another. It does not permit the fashionable professor to wait till Christian labour becomes genteel. It does not permit the wealthy to buy off his personal service by the bribe of large donations. It requires in his activity and his donations too. Whether it contains a man for every post or not, it is certain that it contains a post for every man, and hence the query which some Christian communities make of a newly-admitted member is, "What shall your post be?"

"Were the writer to be asked to what it was owing chiefly that the early triumphs of the Gospel were arrested—how it was that Christian usefulness died out of the world, and piety out of the Church—he would suggest that it was to be ascribed principally to that master-device of Satan, by which the Christian professor was led to suppose that he could do everything by proxy: that there was an order of men on whom, for a certain consideration, he could devolve his duties both to God and to man. Now this, we hardly need remind the reader, is substantial Popery. The very essence of that system consists in undertaking to exempt its votaries from their personal responsibility—in finding a price for every duty, and a discharge from every claim of personal accomplishment.

"We pride ourselves, indeed, in our Protestantism; but if its representation of Popery be correct, it is high time to inquire from how much of that enormous system we have been rescued. For just as much of it as still cleaves to us, by just so much are we effectually disabled from doing the first works and emulating the first days of the Christian Church. Glorious as the Reformation was for the Church, in rescuing its members from the grasp of a spiritual despotism, and making each one feel the necessity of personal faith and personal holiness; as glorious will that Reformation be for the world which shall complete the work of deliverance, by rescuing them also from the grasp of selfishness, and making each one feel his accountability to God for personal activity in the work of human salvation.

"Since "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do," we may be assured that the only way to put an end to present fruitless discussions about Christ and his Gospel is for his people to preach the Word; to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified; to obey his command to preach the Gospel to every creature.

"God's instrument for evangelising the world is his Church; but a Church Pentecostally united is essential to Pentecostal results. The apparatus of the astronomer, or the instrument of the surgeon, must be perfectly adjusted, in order that the one may accurately observe the heavens, or the other successfully perform his delicate operation. How much more must every member of the complex living creature be so absolutely en rapport with God, that whithersoever the Spirit is to go, they go; thither is their spirit to go—if the world is through them to know the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God!

"Only in the power of the Holy Ghost can the world be evangelised. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." But the Spirit can only flow through a united Church. Why did the hundred and twenty so speedily fill Jerusalem with their doctrine, so that the people either gnashed upon them with their teeth, or cried, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" It was because the preachers were knit together in love. Because, "holding fast the Head, from whom all the body being supplied and knit together, through the joints and bands, increased with the increase of God." Because "they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread, and in prayers."

"Why is not England filled with the doctrine of Christ, though it has been preached for centuries? Why do not the rejecters of Christ's Gospel say, "Ye mean to bring this Man's blood upon us"? Because the Gospel is not preached with the demonstration of the Spirit, and with power; with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. What hinders the power? We are not "with one accord in one place." We do not "stand fast in one spirit, with one soul striving together for the faith of the Gospel."

"In the divisions of Reuben—in this and that missionary society—there are great searchings of heart. Centenary and other funds are raised. A hundred missionaries are called for here, another hundred there. A scheme is suggested for a thousand men to pass through the Empire of China, preaching the Gospel once at least to every person within a brief period. But that is scarcely all that the Master meant by "preaching the Gospel to every creature." "Tarry ye in the City of Jerusalem—the habitation of peace—until [all with one accord in one place] ye be endued with power from on high." A million missionaries will not evangelise the world in a million years, with an evangelisation of Pentecostal quality, unless, speaking the truth in love, all are "growing up into Him in all things, who is the Head, even Christ, from whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

"In those days when there was no king in Israel, the congregation as one man were gathered together from Dan to Beersheba, by the sight of the disjecta membra of the Levite's murdered wife. Shall not the more painful sight of the disintegrated members of Christ's body and bride bring together the children of God that are scattered abroad?

"One member has no power apart from its place in the body. A few men could turn the world upside down, when they went forth as representatives of a united Church; but the world began to turn the Church upside down when there arose envying and strife and divisions, and they became carnal, and walked according to man.

"The evangelisation of the world presupposes and requires the actual and visible union of the body of Christ. Through a united Church the ungrieved Spirit of life will pour without measure from the throne of God and of the Lamb. Then the Spirit, and the Bride in her oneness, will say, Come. And he that heareth will say, Come; and he that is athirst will come; and whosoever will, will take the water of life freely.

THE PILGRIM.

"Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Phil. iii. 13, 14.

He stood upon the threshold of the year:
Behind him lay the sunset of the Past,
Twilight was gathering o'er it far and near,
And dews were falling fast.

"The Past is mine no more, but God is keeping
It safe for me," he said, with saddened smile;
Joy comes at morn, after the night of weeping;
I will 'forget' the Past a little while,
And forward go towards the rising sun,
Nor think of resting till the goal is won."

He bent his head in soul-absorbing prayer:
Then forth, across the plain that stretched before,
So shadow-like in mist lay all things there,
All but one step—no more.

"The Future is not mine, but God is giving
It step by step to me," he calmly said.
"To live for God, this is the life worth living,
To live for self is death, since self is dead;
Farewell, O city, built on sands of time,
To the eternal city I will climb."

And as he forward pressed beyond the plain,
Where wreathing mists still lay,
He saw before him ever and again
The city far away.

"Forward I press, for higher yet ascending
The Hills Delectable before me rise,
Out from the mists my upward path is wending
To mountain peaks half hidden in the skies;
Onward I go to meet the rising sun,
Onward for ever, till the prize is won."

RAILWAY IN SYRIA.—The ceremony of turning the first sod of the Syria Ottoman Railway, connecting the port of Haifa with Damascus, recently took place at the foot of Mount Carmel. Mrs. Willing, wife of the president of the company, performed the function in the presence of the principal Mohammedan notabilities of the district and some 15,000 of the inhabitants.

LA MORLAYE.—In connection with the opening of a new chapel the other day at La Morlaye, near Chantilly, a convention of Christian workers was held, presided over by Mr. John Starr, of Halifax, Nova Scotia. After the chairman's opening remarks, Rev. W. Gibson gave the history of the Chantilly Mission, as well as that of La Morlaye, from the beginning. Mr. Moody, nephew of the evangelist, followed with a vigorous address. Then Rev. Bramley Hart delivered an effective and telling speech, and Mr. Hawkins, the evangelist resident at Chantilly, through whom the La Morlaye Mission was begun, also spoke.

Joshua and the Land of Canaan.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

AI.—Joshua vii. 12.

The conquest of Canaan occupied seven years, and during the whole of that time Israel lost but one battle; indeed, the six-and-thirty men smitten in the headlong flight before the men of Ai seem to have been the only loss which their hosts sustained. The story of this defeat is told with great minuteness, because it involved lessons of the greatest moment to Israel, and of incalculable value to ourselves.

The experience of defeat is far too common to the majority of Christians. They are constantly turning their backs before their enemies. They are defeated by indwelling sin and the assaults of Satan, and by the mighty evils which they assail in the name of God. But instead of taking their defeats to heart, they become inured to them. For the time they are filled with mortification and chagrin, but the impression soon wears away. They do not lie on their faces before God, eager to discover the cause of failure, to deal with it, and to advance from the scene of defeat to wider and more permanent success. If only we carefully investigated the causes of our defeats, they would be only second to victories in their blessed results on our characters and lives.

There were three causes for this defeat.

I. THEY WERE SELF-CONFIDENT BECAUSE AI WAS SMALL.

Jericho was a heap of smouldering ruin. Man and woman, both young and old, and ox, and sheep and ass, all had been utterly destroyed with the edge of the sword. The only relics were the silver and gold and vessels of brass and iron, which had been placed among the precious stores of the Tabernacle; the woman Rahab, her people and her property; and a certain Babylonish garment, some silver shekels, and a wedge of gold, of which we shall hear again.

Fearing no attack from the rear, Joshua at once set his face towards the interior of the country, and chose a deep gorge or ravine, which lay a little towards the north, as the passage-way for his army. Eight miles from its opening on the Jordan valley this ravine met another, "in a wild entanglement of hill and valley," and near the junction of the two stood the little town of Ai, with a population of 12,000 persons. The proportion of fighting men has been calculated at about 2,000, but the situation was strong and commanded the pass, so that Joshua had no alternative but to mete out to it the same terrible fate as that with which he had visited Jericho.

Speaking after the manner of men, there was considerable force in the report of the spies sent up the valley to reconnoitre. The place was much smaller than Jericho, and would apparently require much less expenditure of time and strength for its capture. Jericho may have needed the entire host, but for Ai, some 3,000 men would surely suffice. "Make not all the people to toil thither, for they (i.e., the men of Ai) are but few."

But this recommendation went on the supposition that Jericho had been overthrown by the attack of the hosts of Israel; whereas in point of fact they had had singularly little to do with it. They had walked around it and shouted. That was all. It had been taken by their great Captain and Leader, and by Him given into their hands. The silence that reigned over its site was no criterion of their might, but of his. To speak as they did was to ignore the real facts of the case, and to argue as though the victory were due to some inherent qualities in themselves; with the inference that because they had conquered at Jericho they must therefore necessarily conquer at Ai. They had yet to learn that when God is with his people, the greatest difficulties disappear as stubble before flame; but that, apart from Him, the least are more than sufficient to inflict defeat.

There is no experience in the Christian life so full of peril as the hour when we are flushed with recent victory. Then comes the temptation to sacrifice to our net, and burn incense to our drag. We magnify our part in the conflict till it fills the whole range of vision. We boast to ourselves that we have gotten the land in possession by our own sword, and that our own arm has saved us. Counting from our great triumph at Jericho, we despise such a small obstacle as Ai. Surely, we argue, if we have carried the one, we shall easily prevail at the other! And so, it frequently happens that a great success in public is followed by a fall in private; that those who had swept all before them in the pulpit or on the platform are overcome by some miserable appetite, or by petulance in the home; and the bitter regret of that sin wipes out all the glad exhilaration of the hour of victory. We never so need to observe the injunction to watch and pray as when the foe is flying before us. When the mighty convocation breaks up, its convictions having been turned by our single voice, as the people are departing to their homes, and the bodies of the priests of Baal choke the Kishon, we must be careful to go up to the top of Carmel, where we had girded ourselves for the conflict, and, bowing ourselves to the earth, put our face between our knees in prayer.

Had Joshua acted thus he would never have been induced by the words of the spies to reason on mere military grounds. He would never have presumed on the insignificance of the little town. And he would never have had the anguish of seeing his panic-stricken soldiers come rushing down the rugged pass, or sheltering in the stone-quarries on either hand, whilst the men of Ai, in full pursuit, were cutting down the hindmost and least nimble.

There is nothing small in Christian life: nothing so small that we can combat it in our own strength. Apart from God the smallest temptations will be more than a match for us. So weak are we that occasions of sin, which are perfectly contemptible in themselves, will overthrow our most confident resolutions. The victories which we have won in fellowship with God have imparted no inherent might to us; we are as weak as ever; and directly we are brought into collision with the least of our enemies, apart from Him, we shall inevitably go down before the shock. The faith, watchfulness, and fellowship with God which availed before Jericho can alone serve as the key to Ai.

II. THEY FAILED TO WAIT ON GOD.

An accursed thing in their midst broke the link of fellowship between them and the hosts that served beneath the celestial Warrior who had appeared to Joshua. And though it must have been a severe sorrow to Jehovah to inflict sorrow on his people, yet for their sake and for the sake of his holy name, the sin must be judged and put away. Joshua pleaded, "What wilt Thou do for thy great name?" But it was for that very reason that the defeat had been permitted.

There is not the least doubt that if Joshua had been in abiding fellowship with God, the Spirit of God would have indicated the presence of evil in the host; so that Achan and his sin would have been discovered and judged before the march to Ai. It was so in an analogous case in the Acts of the Apostles. What Achan was to Israel, that Ananias and his wife were to the early Church. Nor can we doubt that the fifth chapter of the Acts would have recorded some great defeat or crushing disaster, if it had not contained the story of the discernment on the part of the Apostle Peter, and by the Holy Ghost, of the accursed thing to which the guilty pair were privy.

If we may dare to imagine what would have been the consequence in the primitive Church had the root of evil been left unextirpated, we must not only wipe out the record of the signs and wonders wrought among the people, of the unity of the disciples, and of the burst doors of the prison; but we must interpolate an account of how the hosts of God, in diminished numbers, gave back before the fury of their adversaries: of how Peter lay with his face in the dust of the Temple courts; of how panic and dismay filled the hearts of leaders and led; and of how the name of the Lord Jesus was blasphemed and his character traduced. But none of these things befell because the Spirit of God was able to utter his unhindered testimony.

Very important is it for us to heed the Apostle's warning, "if we discerned ourselves we should not be judged." God sees the little rift in the lute; the spot of decay in the fruit; the ulcer in the flesh threatening to eat away its vitality. These may not be realised by us, but He knows how inevitably they must lead to defeat. Nor is He slow to warn us of them. Yet of what use is it for Him to speak to deaf ears, or to those who are self-confident in their own wisdom, or who pride themselves on victories which were wholly His gift? Amid the gaiety of the revel, we do not see the handwriting on the wall; amid the unanimous advice of the false prophets we do not inquire for the one voice that may speak evil of our plans; amid the radiant sunlight of the morning, in which the dancing wavelets flash, we do not care to see the falling glass, or be guided by the dark prognostications of the weather-beaten sailor. Probably there is no single temptation which has not to claim precommission of God before it touches us. He who permits it prays for us, raising his voice in lone vigil whilst we sleep, anticipating the attack by ambushes of intercession, and, not content with this, He warns us not once nor twice; He even touches us with fingers that would thrill us were we not insensible, steeped in spiritual lethargy.

Where God's children, like Joshua, are oblivious to the warning voices, which speak in ever fainter tones as they are disregarded, God is compelled to let them take their course until some terrible disaster flings them on their faces to the ground. Ah! if Joshua had only prostrated himself amid the shoutings of victory over Jericho there would have been no need for him to prostrate himself amid the outcry of a panic-stricken host. If he had only sought counsel of God before he sent the spies up the pass there would have been no need to ask what he should do to repair his defeat. The ir pruning-knife of trouble has to do for many of us roughly and hurtfully, what the silver pruning-knife of the Word of God might have effected. "We are chastened of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world."

Before ever we make some new advance although the point of attack be but an Ai, it is our duty, as it is our best policy, to get back to Gilgal. Joshua does not seem to have returned there after the fall of Jericho. We need to seclude ourselves in spiritual converse with our Almighty Confederate, asking if He has ought to say to us, entreating that He should reveal any evil thing that He may see in us, and mustering the tribes of our heart before his scrutiny, that the Achan lurking there may be brought to light before, instead of after, the fight.

III.—THEY HAD COMMITTED A TRESPASS IN THE DEVOTED THING.

(1) Joshua was inclined to lay the charge of the failure on God. It seemed to him as if the Almighty had done ill by them in bringing them into the heart of such mighty difficulties. In his judgment, warped by the presence of disaster, it appeared as if it had been better for the camp to have remained on the other side Jordan. The dreariest anticipations of defeat and destruction passed in spectral form before him. He spoke as one whom faith had deserted, the locks of his might shorn, and himself no longer a hero, but like the Canaanites themselves, whose heart had melted as his did now. To what extremities shall we not be reduced when faith expires! But in point of fact, the blame lay not with God, who was engaged in conducting his people within reach of superlative blessedness, but wholly with themselves.

There are times in our lives when we are disposed to find fault with God. "Why, Great Potter, hast Thou made me thus? Why was I ever taken out of my quiet home, or country parish, or happy niche of service, to be plunged into this sea of difficulties?" When we are smarting from some defeat, caused by the overpowering might or the clever strategy of the foe, we are prone to blame God; either that our nature was not stronger, or that He has brought us from the shelter of comparative obscurity and placed us on the mountain slope where the storms expend their wildest fury. Alas! that we forget that our Father brings us across the Jordan to give us larger experiences, to open before us vaster possibilities, to give us the chance of proving more of his unsearchable riches; that there is no task without sufficiency of grace, no foe without a sufficiency of victorious power; no trial without a sufficiency of resource by which, as in the old dream of the alchemist, the hardest commonest metal may be transformed to gold.

The defeats that we incur in the Land of Promise are not necessary. They are due entirely to sore failure in ourselves, and they cause grief to the immortal Lover of our souls. There is no reason for defeat in the Christian life; always, and everywhere we are meant to be more than conquerors. The course of the Christian warrior should be as the sun when he goeth forth in his strength, and in regular lients drives his chariot from the eastern wave the steep of heaven. Child of God, never lay blame of your failure on God; seek for it in!

2) One Israelite only had trespassed, and yet it aid, "The children of Israel committed a tress in the devoted thing." No one of us stands ne, we cannot sin without insensibly affecting spiritual condition of all our fellows. We can-grow cold without lowering the temperature of contiguous hearts. We cannot pass upward hout lifting others. No asteroid revolves through ce without affecting the position and speed of ry member of its system. No grain lies upon seashore without influencing all its companion ins. "None of us liveth to himself, and none h to himself." "Whether one member ereth, all the members suffer with it, or one mber is honoured, all the members rejoice with f Israel had but realised how much the safety of whole depended on the obedience of each, each ividual would have watched his brethren, as he ched himself, not for their sakes alone, but for own; and did the members of Christian comnities understand how vast an influence for weal woe depends upon the choice, the decision, the on of any, there would be a fuller and more inigent obedience to the reiterated injunction of New Testament, for the strong to bear the inmities of the weak, for the loftiest to stoop to wash feet of the lowliest, and for all to look not on ir own things only, but also on the things of ers. "Looking carefully lest any man fail of the ce of God."

Should these words be read by any soul which is scious of playing an Achan's part, let it take rning, and whilst it is called To-day, confess, ore, and repent. Not only that it may escape inevitable judgment, but that it may not bring aster and defeat upon those with whom it ociates, dragging the innocent down into the tex of a common fate. The hands of Achan e stained with the blood of the thirty-six that ished in the flight to Shebarim.
3) How careless we are of God's distinct prohibi-
ns. Nothing could have been more clearly pro-lgated than the command to leave the spoils of richo untouched. The city and its contents were oted to utter destruction, a specified number of cles only being preserved for Tabernacle use.
s ordinance was probably intended to preserve children of Israel from the temptation which st have accrued, had they glutted themselves n the spoils of the city. The abstinence tended trengthen their character, and to educate their
h. But to Achan, the will of God was over-ne by the lust of his eyes and the pride of life.
e strong tide of passion swept him over the rier reared by the divine word.
Let us not, however, judge him too hardly. He not the last who has acted in distinct violation Divine commands. The Bible is full of prohibins against the love of the world, the love of dress, love of money, against censoriousness and le and unhallowed ambition; against the bylonish garment and the wedge of gold; and yet usands of Christian people live in complacent bedience, as if God were one of themselves, or f his words were unsubstantial as smoke. What nder that the forces of his Israel meet with eat, and that the old word is verified in individual erience and in the history of the Church, rael hath sinned; yea, they have even transssed my covenant which I commanded them;
, they have even taken of the devoted thing.
erefore they cannot stand before their enemies,
I will not be with you any more except ye troy the devoted thing from among you."

NEW WORK.—There has been established in w York what is known as the "Industrial Chris-n Alliance." It is unsectarian, and is supported voluntary contributions from those who believe in ping humanity. Since its organisation about a r ago, it has done a great and a good work. It is institution whose aim is to help men to help them-res. Those who are homeless and friendless are eived, and furnished with employment, lodging, food, clothing. Already 360 men have found welcome his home, and 180 of this number have been sucsful in securing situations as clerks and mechanics, so on. This institution has a board of directors mposed of prominent business men and pastors of ding churches.

WHAT WE FIND IN JESUS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

"I HAVE found him whom my soul loveth." This beautiful passage from the Canticles may be applied, and often has been applied, to the tender relation which exists between Jesus Christ and the true believer. Some passages in the Bible that seem to be contradictory are only the opposite sides of the same great truth. Practical Christianity is the doing everything for Christ; from another point of view it is Christ doing everything for us. Christ tells us that He came into this world to seek for and to find the lost; He is the compassionate Shepherd who brings home the wandering sheep, rejoicing. In several other passages the sinner is described as seeking the Saviour; and Andrew said unto Simon Peter: "We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ."

When a penitent sinner finds Jesus, he discovers in Him what he never saw before. He obtains from Jesus what he never had before; and he becomes, through Jesus, what he never was before. Let us recount some of the blessings which we who call ourselves Christians have obtained by finding Christ. Columbus took home to Spain specimens of the rare fruits and of the precious stones and metals which he had gathered in the newly discovered islands of America. Let us look at some things infinitely more precious which we obtain when we find Jesus.

1. The first thing that we name is the blessed boon of pardon. This merciful Saviour "receiveth sinners," and bestows on them forgiveness of their sins. Even amid the last agonies on the cross He prayed for his fiendish persecutors—"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." The great reason and the all-sufficient reason why you and I could be forgiven is, that Jesus Christ by his atonement bore our sins in his own body on the tree. He was of all my sins "the double cure"; He cleansed me from their "guilt and power." Paul, the converted persecutor, voiced the exultant hope of a myriad of forgiven sinners when he cried out: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus."

2. The second precious treasure we find in our accepted Saviour is peace. "My peace I give unto you," is his wondrously gracious declaration. He calls it "mine," because it is in many respects like his own; He calls it "mine" because He died in order to secure it for us. We were before at enmity with a holy, sin-hating God; but now we "have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." We don't dread God any longer, for we are reconciled to Him; our fears are quelled, our enmities are over; we submit to God cheerfully, and let Him have his way. A delightful quiet of soul has succeeded to all the fears, anxieties, and conflicts that made our hearts like Galilee's lake under the lashings of the tempest. The dark clouds of God's righteousness no longer overhang us; the thunderings of a violated law no longer fright us. The storm is over, and Jesus has said to the angry waves, "Peace—be still," and there is a great calm. A clear sky is above us, and the everlasting mountain of God's holy will reflects itself as on a tranquil sea of pure glass. We are at peace with God, at peace with conscience, at peace with ourselves, and ought to be at peace with our fellow-men. Blessed is the true believer! His powers and affections work in happy harmony, and the old jarring discords between a stubborn will and a condemning conscience are hushed. He is no longer afraid of God, or afraid of himself, or afraid of dying, or afraid of the Judgment Day, or of Hell; for he is sheltered under the love that casts out all fear. The only fear that a healthy Christian ought to have is lest he should not find out his whole duty and do it at whatever cost. This is a wholesome fear; but as to all those wretched doubts and dreads and worries and conflicts that distressed him, the loving Saviour kisses them away as a mother kisses away the tears of her frightened child, and He says, in cheery tones, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, do I give unto you."

3. When we find Jesus we also find an omnipotent and an ever-present Friend. Human friendships are too often but brittle reeds; the friendship of Jesus is an immovable rock. I can trust Him. He is able to keep my feet from falling and my soul from death. I can trust his guidance, for He knows just where I ought to tread. His bright presence can illuminate the darkest tunnel of trial through which I am ever called to pass. I can trust his promises, for He has never broken them, and I can trust his grace, for it is all sufficient. Above all I can trust his love, even when his pruning-knife is cutting my vine the most sharply or when He is burning out my dross and slag in the furnace of affliction. As a child walking over a slippery and dangerous path cries out, "Father, I am falling!" and has but a moment to catch his father's hand, so every believer sees hours when only the hand of Jesus comes between him and the abysses of destruction. Perish every friendship sooner than Christ's!

> Yes, for me, for me He careth
> With a brother's tender care;
> Yes, with me, with me He shareth
> Every burden, every care.

My only hope of final salvation lies in this glorious fact, that having loved his own who are in the world, He loveth us until the end. During a pretty long life I have enjoyed many sweet friendships, and heard many inspiring words from human lips; but I can say, with my beloved old teacher, Dr. Charles Hodge, that "there is more power to cheer, to elevate, to strengthen, and to sanctify, in the one word Jesus than in all the utterances of man since the world began."

4. There are many other things which we find in Christ that I have no space to speak of. He is our Teacher, He is our Shepherd, he is our Protector, He is our Comforter. Best of all, He is infinitely lovable. "I have found Him whom my soul loveth." Can you say that, my reader? To say that honestly is to profess Christianity; to feel that in the depths of your soul is to possess Christianity. Here is the test question, "Lovest thou Me?" If no love for Christ, then no true religious life. Little love means little life; much love means much life; perfect love is perfect life. The one unfailing test of character is—"for me to live is Christ"; less than this means disease, and utter lack of this means spiritual death.

Have you found Jesus? Then bear in mind that what is found may be lost! You may drive Him from you. If you sink into sloth He may turn from you with the sad reproach, "Could ye not watch with Me one hour?" You may lose Him by admitting selfish lusts into your heart; for He is a lover who will not allow any rivals.

"I found him whom my soul loveth; I held him and would not let him go." Hold him fast, brother, and He will bring thee safe through and land thee in glory.

Here, as in one matchless bouquet, are these six fragrant flowers: Jesus our sin-bearer, Jesus our peace-giver, Jesus our unfailing, omnipotent Friend, Jesus our Comforter, Jesus the Saviour of our souls, Jesus our all and in all for evermore. These flowers will keep sweet until Heaven dawns. If you have these, then yours is the beauty of holiness.

THE LAW OF THE SABBATH.

REPLYING to the letter by Rev. Dr. Jacob, given in our issue of December 15, Mr. Albert Smith, Plutus House, Leicester, traverses the statement that "the observance of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath is as exact a verbal and literal obedience to the Fourth Commandment as was the Saturday Sabbath of the Jews." He maintains that the commandment does not speak of just any seventh day, but specifies the seventh day after six days of work, as God rested after the six days of creation. He proceeds: "If it be only the seventh day after any six which the Commandment enjoins, then we could have the Sabbath on any or every day of the week, according to where we might begin our count. This would bring confusion." Though not himself a Seventh-day Adventist, Mr. Smith appeals for exact and sound interpretation of Scripture, so that the truth may be arrived at.

Mr. J. H. Mitchell, writing from 12, St. Peter's-street, Islington, N., says:—"In the physical creation, named in Genesis, the seventh day was the Sabbath. Man fell, and consequently, in the spiritual creation by Christ, the day was changed to the Lord's Day. As to the sacredness of this day, there never was any doubt or question. The Jewish Sabbath, of course, held some power over early Jewish converts, but they always kept sacred the first day of the week as the Lord's own." After calling attention to Acts xx. 7, 1 Cor. xiv. 2, and Rev. i. 10, the writer says:—"The early Christians, within the first and succeeding centuries, bear witness to the Lord's Day, of its sacred binding nature; and if it was binding on them, it must be on us also."

From Mons. F. Coillard.

I feel under great obligation to the unknown friend who for so many years now has regularly sent me your estimable paper. The Christian may be delayed, it may reach us in odd numbers, but it is always a welcome friend, never failing to bring a drop of cold water to thirsty, lonely, and weary workers. I am also under great obligation to you, dear brother, for the kind notice which now and then you have taken of our Zambesi Mission, though I so seldom write.

It is now seven years since our expedition crossed the Zambesi and the mission was started; a long time in one's short life; and yet we are still passing through that arduous and uninteresting period of breaking the fallow ground and sowing the seed. We anxiously watch for the appearance of the little cloud and the showers of blessings which it shall bring. Sometimes a little mist in the atmosphere has filled our hearts with hope; then the mist vanished away, and the sun shone in a brazen sky, fiercer and more scorching than ever. "He that observeth the wind shall not sow, and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap!" We remembered it. The Lord has given us grace to toil on, plough, and sow, and expect against all appearances. We know that the seed is not lost. Silently, secretly, under the clods, it germinates, and the first shower shall adorn with verdure our parched ground. The time shall come; therefore we faint not.

These last three years have been to us more by far than all our missionary life years of toil, trials, and suffering. The social and political state of the country has been greatly disturbed by internal causes, and the advent of the British South Africa Company. Sickness and death have thinned our ranks as quickly as we had the joy of receiving helpers from Europe at great expense, and we have seen our brightest hopes and our dearest plans blighted and dashed to the ground. I have been foremost in the deepest waters of affliction. On 28th October, 1891—nearly a year ago as I write—it pleased the Lord to take to Himself the beloved wife He had given me, and who for more than thirty years shared and cheered all my labours, wanderings, adventures, and hardships. Storm after storm followed, the one more terrible than the other. But in all the bitterness of my sorrows and the darkness of my affliction, the presence of Jesus was a blessed reality. Methinks I heard his voice, "Peace, be still!" There is now a rift in our cloudy sky; there is calm within and without. "It has been good for me to be afflicted," to be "emptied from vessel to vessel." "The Lord is a sun and a shield; He gives grace and glory."

Compelled by weakness of health to wean myself almost completely from school teaching, and to leave it to Miss Kiener and our native teacher, Parluse Kaneli, I gave greater attention and more time to evangelistic work. One cannot do much in this country in the way of "house-to-house" work, however delightful it be. The climate, the distances, and then the deep sand of the hills and the marshes, in which are built most of the villages of the valley, all combine to make bodily exertion a formidable task, which is often overshadowed by fever.

For many years the site of the capital has been the subject of much discussion. The great drawback of the present one is its distance from the river. But when the Barotsi saw that after two years of labour we had solved a similar problem with regard to Sefula, in connecting the station with the river by a canal, they naturally thought that they, with the compulsory help of the whole nation, could do something better and more grand. And so, indeed, they have done. Thousands of men have set to work for months under their respective chiefs, and not only have they connected the king's town with the river, but have carried their canal far away for many miles among the hills, draining some marshes into good agricultural ground. Their aim is to reach a network of lakes which will yield, it is hoped, a good permanent stream. If they succeed, as I trust they may, it will be a great feat accomplished, and very creditable to them. Thus the worthy friend who gave us the means of making our own canal will have the honour of having made two without any more expense.

The site of the capital being once fixed permanently, it became urgent for us to occupy without further delay this important post of evangelisation. It would be cruel and fratricidal to call a young married brother to so uninviting a post, where not only the material life is so difficult, but where health and life itself are constantly at stake, the place being a hot bed of fever. Only a single man could venture to brave the difficulties of the situation. I am the only one single man in the mission now; the call to duty is then very clear, and I go. Our devoted friend, Mr. W. Waddell, has postponed his long looked-for visit to Scotland in order to put up the principal buildings of the new station. A saw-bench sent by some Glasgow friends, and put up by Mr. Waddell with wonderful perseverance and skill, has already rendered us great service, and we have a vast quantity of building material ready, which, without the saw-bench, it would have been impossible to procure and prepare.

We have earnestly prayed that the Lord would glorify Himself by the death of my beloved wife. We have not been put to shame. A few young men had confessed Christ publicly before she left. Her last sight on earth was one of those hard-hearted Barotsi weeping, and weeping over his sins. A few others have followed, and also three women in whom she was deeply interested, and for whose conversion her heart would have thrilled with joy. I must sadly admit that this little movement has in every way come very short of our expectations. We should like to find in our young converts a deeper conviction of sin, greater zeal for the Lord and for the salvation of their fellow-men. We should have liked to see the movement spreading like the fire of our forests. However, the work of the Spirit of God cannot be denied, and we take those few conversions, such as they are, and all the cheering dispositions which we notice around us, as the tokens of greater, richer blessings and brighter days. One of those converts has lately died, leaving, as a widow, after three months of married life, a girl who has grown up in our house. Korona, or Griqua, of origin, he had come long ago to this country, driving wagons and hunting with European gentlemen—a life that wears out quickly. In my service he was brought to the knowledge of the Saviour. His thirst for instruction, his desire to redeem the time, were great. He yearned after the moment when he would help me in the work, not simply as a driver (a very useful and indispensable man in his place) but as an evangelist. But the Lord willed it otherwise. An internal disease did its work speedily, and he was removed from this world of temptation and sin and sorrow to the mansions of the King in glory.

Some months ago a war party was sent by the king against a troublesome tribe of the Balubale. They came back with an immense booty of slaves—women and children—and with that terrible scourge the smallpox. No sanitary or preventive measure could be adopted with wild people like these. Those warriors and their slaves scattered themselves in their villages, and within a few weeks the whole of the valley was writhed under the awful plague. It is impossible to ascertain the number of deaths, or to form a correct idea at present of their proportion with regard to the population. Hardly anyone escapes the disease, even those who have had it formerly. The people have left off wailing for the dead, and many are not even buried, but thrown into the king's canal, in the river, or in the fields—anywhere to get rid of them. In times of such distress we prayerfully sought what was in our power to do. I inoculated some cows, and then vaccinated the people with the virus. We succeeded, after many attempts. But we had to struggle against the selfishness of the king, who wanted the vaccination for his own self, his children, his harem, then his own village, and then, but only then, for those next to him in dignity, and for the nation at large. The people at first flocked to me, and we vaccinated hundreds of them, but once vaccinated, themselves and their children, they would not come back to have others vaccinated from their virus. And in order to keep it up I had to go again through the tedious ordeal of inoculating cows, and then teach some intelligent young men how to vaccinate, so that these preventive means might spread. I gave also a supply of good virus to all the brethren, and we hope that it may prove efficacious in the lower districts which the disease has not yet reached. Native doctors, of course, make a keen competition, and enrich themselves, but some have taken the disease and have died.

My letter is long, and I must cut short. But let me say one word more. We have opened doors before us. We expect some missionaries from home soon; we hope for two, and four native teachers from Basutoland. Let English Christians come to our help with their gifts and their prayers.

Yours in the Lord, F. Coillard.

OPENINGS IN MOROCCO.

We are grateful to God for the open doors i Morocco city. The people throng our court mor ing after morning in quest of medicine. Hundre of Moors have heard repeatedly of Jesus and his sa vation. Many of them, we believe, are sick of th weary bondage of Mohammedanism, and long after better life and a brighter hope. The Word of Go has been scattered over the land, in town and vi lage, and many are reading the priceless word His Living Word is not bound; it goes where th missionary cannot go, and then silently, like th dew on a summer's night, carries blessing and life the remotest parts.

Some weeks ago I had occasion to be in a Moor house in the town. He introduced me to sever friends who had come all the way from the Sahar a journey which took them fourteen days to accon plish. My friend informed me that they had becon greatly interested in a Gospel which was in th house, and so anxious were they to know its co tents that they had been sitting up at nights copyin chapters from it in order to take a portion away their desert home. "We have been looking for th book for a long time," said one; "but no one cou tell us where we might find it." We put into the hands several copies of the Gospels, and had ma conversations with them before they left.

Yours in Him,

Mazagan, Morocco. John Geddes.

THE STORY OF NED.

In a penny booklet just issued at the Hon of Industry, Miss Macpherson, in her own simple y graphic way, tells the story of Ned Brown, and h he established a prairie home for himself, h parents, and brothers and sisters. The caref training out West, the honest, steady toil demande the opportunities for those willing to work, t beauty of the country, the fertility of the soil—t these are touched upon briefly, while by and by N is seen prosperous and grateful, bringing over, as w have said, his parents from the old country to che and comfort them in his own home on his own fa in the Beautiful Plains.

In the last letter Ned writes to Miss Macph son—

"I find that to-day, after a lapse of years, t greatest desire of my heart has been achieve through the mercy of God, and your unmerited kin ness. Father and mother, the three little ones, I a my sisters, are at home together in the North-We on the farm we are proud to call our own. I am good hopes of prosperous harvests in the future. M many respects for all, and my deep gratitude to y and all your faithful workers."

The whole story is a delightful and vivid illustrati of what this emigration work really means, and what is doing for thousands who, had they tarried at hon must have merely swollen the ranks of misfortu and misery. The booklet may be had from T Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

"'TWAS BUT."

'Twas but a word in sorrow's hour,
I murmured low;
'Twas nothing but a wayside flower
To one in woe:
How little did it seem to me
That flower wild;
Yet on the word and on the flower
The great God smiled.

'Twas but a hand-press and a tear
Where life was sad;
Only a smile of joy and cheer
Where all was glad;
Such tiny deeds they seemed to me,
As from a child;
Yet on the hand-press, on the tear,
The great God smiled.

'Twas but the lifting of the cross
Laid at my feet;
Only the letting go my will
My Lord's to meet;
But weakly things they seem—and all
By sin defiled,
Yet on the gift of will and heart
The great God smiled.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN IRELAND.

THE following are extracts from a diary of a orker in connection with the Irish Church Mission, ublin, engaged in itinerating work through the ountry parts of Ireland:—

"From September 14 to November 28 we visited ne counties, attending fifty fairs and markets, lling our books and preaching the Gospel to thou-nds of Roman Catholics, the great majority of hom no doubt heard the Gospel for the first time. uring this time we disposed of 582 Douay Testa-ents, 248 'Glories of Jesus,' 668 'Peter's Letters,' 8 copies of the 'Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,' 8 copies of the 'Life of St. Peter,' and two Douay bles. We also sold 464 of the various books men-oned above to Christian people who desired to have em to give away to Roman Catholic friends, and e circulated free in the various markets and fairs ousands of Gospel and controversial pamphlets.

"On Saturday, November 19, we arrived at a very rge hiring market: the street was thronged with owds of young men and women seeking to be red as farm servants. These came from country stricts, and, as a rule, are Roman Catholics. One us borrowed a box, which he placed by the side the street in line with an apple-cart and a cheap-ck's stall. On the box were soon spread out ouay Testaments and other Scriptural books and rtions. A crowd soon gathered round. We en called out our wares, and many came forward buy. We quickly opened a second stall further the street, and did a good business. We ad portions of Scripture, dwelling especially verses to emphasise the importance of read-g God's Word, and of his great love to ners. One of us who mingled in the crowd uld hear the conversation as the people examined e books, and it was found that those who bought the oks were almost exclusively Romanists. After a time e of us spoke to the people, and a man called out, Read some of the book'; so we read part of a apter, after which we sold a good number. Thus e three of us were enabled, by relieving one another the two stalls, to keep up a constant fire, and to l our entire stock of Testaments, pamphlets, etc.

"One day, whilst speaking in a market on the oman of Samaria in St. John's Gospel, a man epped forward, and in a very indignant mood told we were wrong; that it was in the Epistle, and much as implied that we were deceiving the ople. This quite excited the crowd, which grew ry large. We handed a Douay Testament to the an, and told him we would undertake to show the ory to him in the Gospel, and that if he would ow it to us in the Epistle we would give him a £1 te, and the book into the bargain, but he had not s spectacles. So we appealed to the people if we ould read the chapter. They shouted 'Yes,' and read the account of the woman of Samaria, and e people were most attentive. We went on to re a simple Gospel address, dwelling on the Water Life as the gift of God. We had a splendid time, d came away in the evening with an empty bag, aising God for answering our prayers which we d offered up the same morning in the railway rriage on our way to the town.

"On another occasion we visited a very large r, at a town which had the reputation of being tirely a Roman Catholic place. Several friends rned us against going there, for fear of a disturb-ce, but prayer was made for that town and God s with us. Our stall was started about 11.30 and s kept going until after two o'clock, when we had d all our Testaments and books. We did not go for regular preaching and singing, considering e nature of the place, but in selling books one interfered with us. Many came and ught, and some who feared to come openly sent ildren. We noticed one man who had satisfied mself as to the genuineness of the book, and ught a Douay Testament, and then went and told other man, who seemed afraid to come forward mself. The man, therefore, returned for a Testa-ent for his friend, and whilst they strolled away ongst the cattle the timid man got the book and pped it away, lest anyone should see it. Thus continued to sell, and to speak to the people thered round our stall, till all our books were ld, when we left praising God."

THE MERE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY, which has en doing a good work for fifty-two years, is still vorous and active, and has lately been carrying on vital aggressive work.

A STUDY IN THE MIRACLES.

(JOHN VI.)

IN the miracles mentioned by St. John there is, in every case, definite teaching as well as material relief. This is especially to be remarked in his graphic description of the miraculous feeding of the multitude in chapter vi. The story had been told by each of the Evangelists—the only miracle which had this fourfold record—but when the beloved disciple read over the words of the earlier Gospel chronicles, his memory, even at the distance of probably sixty years, supplied so many beautiful additional touches that he wrote it again, and, like all his other narratives of that wonderful life, it has the vividness of colour and the lingering minuteness of detail that could be given only by the enthusiasm of love.

And so we are enabled to picture the scene. It occurred in the second year of Christ's public ministry, which was spent principally in Galilee, and by this time his fame had spread abroad through all the country. We must remember, in explanation of this, at a time when our modern means of rapid communication were unknown, that the whole of Palestine is smaller than Scotland, and that the province of Galilee did not cover so large an area as one of our medium-sized English counties, being, in fact, but sixty miles in length by thirty in width Moreover, Capernaum, the place which, after his rejection at Nazareth, He chose as his principal residence, and which gained the honourable title of "his own city," was situated in the centre of a most populous district at the head of the Sea of Galilee, whose mercantile and marine activity would favour the rapid spread of any startling news. And when the news was of miraculous and instantaneous cures wrought in utterly hopeless cases, we cease to wonder that Christ was often driven by the very pressure of eager crowds into remote and uninhabited regions, only, however, to be followed there, as in this instance, by thousands who, in their urgent desire to be near the Great Prophet, forgot even "to take bread."

And so we find Him now surrounded by "a great multitude," far away from the supply of food that even a village might have furnished, and grievously in need of physical refreshment. An embodied parable of the dependence of the whole world on Christ, who must open his mediatorial hand before the desire of a single living thing can be satisfied! His method in the miracle is remarkable. His first attention is given to the moral education of his disciples, and by a test question to Philip He brings out the utmost stretch of human resource in contrast to his own. What a key to many of his dealings with his disciples to-day! We are brought face to face with a grave emergency, and in the pause of dread with which we look round, vainly and hopelessly, for some way of escape, we do not recognise the Divine questioning and its purpose. "Whence shall we buy bread?" It often looks to us so pitilessly like being thrown on our own resources. No answering voice when we pray, no gleam of light, only the dark relentless difficulty blocking the way. And yet, if we are Christ's, He is there, and the apparent quiescence on his part, that seems to keep the responsibility in our impotent hands, is only his way of proving us. He longs to hear the triumphant answer of faith, "Whence Lord?—from Thee! only from Thee!"

Is not this a beautiful glimpse behind the veil that sometimes darkens his designs? "He Himself knew what He would do." There are no difficulties to Him. What was the feeding of five thousand to One who every year "clothes the valleys with corn" for the bread-supply of a whole planet! And yet He disdained not the humblest human co-operation. It was fitting that the quiet, sagacious Andrew, who had already brought to Jesus his own brother Simon to be fashioned by that Divine hand into a fisher of men, by whom 5000 were to be brought into the Gospel net, should now suggest the insignificant means by which, through the same miraculous power, 5000 men were to be fed with human food.

Like all the miracles of our Lord, this one was unostentatious. No obtrusive manifestation of this increasing supply. The disciples only knew, as they passed up and down the ranks of comfortably-seated people, placed by "the God of order" in such symmetrical array, that the contents of their hastily-improvised "baskets" did not fail, and that it was only as the demand was satisfied that the supply ceased. A striking contrast to the pseudo-miracles of modern times. Winking madonnas, ensanguined saints, and "mahatma" billets that float downward from the ceiling, may gratify while they degrade human credulity, but as we study the miracles of our Lord, their fitness to the occasion, their benevolence, and their absence of mystery or possible collusion, unite to give us the glad assurance that we "have not followed cunningly-devised fables" in according to them our heartiest and most ennobling credence.

Ennobling, because from the study of each one —as of this—we turn away enriched with deeper spiritual teaching, and with a greater readiness to antedate the heavenly anthem of praise. "Thou art worthy, Lord, to receive glory and honour and power, for Thou hast created all things, and for Thy pleasure"—gracious and beneficent—"they are and were created." M. C. F.

LONDON BIBLE-WOMEN.

"BIBLE-WOMEN AND NURSES," the very readable record of the excellent work of the London Bible and Domestic Female Mission, has reached its ninth annual volume (Cassell and Co.). The pages tell a story of deep interest, many passages being pregnant with tender pathos and humanity. The mission employs 130 Bible-women and eighty-two nurses in all parts of the metropolis, under the guidance of 160 lady superintendents. Besides this, forty-one Bible-women and two nurses are affiliated and engaged in similar work abroad.

Towards the close of the volume the hon. secretary and general superintendent of the mission, Mrs. Selfe Leonard, writes:—"The mission has now been in existence for thirty-five years, during the whole of which time its agents and its directors have been intently studying the needs of the London poor, and how best to meet those needs. Our position after this continuous effort is this:—(1) We have gained the love, the confidence, and the gratitude of our poor friends themselves. No one who has visited much with one of our Bible-women will ever forget how dull eyes kindle, and worn faces brighten as they meet her on her daily rounds. As for our nurses, not a day passes without the expression of unbounded gratitude from many a patient.

"(2) We have gained the confidence and warm appreciation of those workers among the poor who have the best opportunities of testing the value of our agents—the local ministers of religion and the local medical men. Again and again those who are constantly at work on the same districts as our nurses, say to us:—'You send us just the right women. We do not mind waiting for one of your nurses; we would rather do so than run the risk of getting an unsuitable person.' In many instances where we have placed an agent on a district, we are soon asked to place another on another part of the same, or on a contiguous district. A Bible-woman or nurse seldom remains for long our solitary representative, for those who watch her work observe that one good worker only reveals the need of others.

"It is just two years and a-half since we knew of the death of our great helper, 'G. M. E.,' which meant to us not only the loss of his ever kind and wise sympathy, but also of £3000 per annum. To meet this loss and yet preserve the Mission, not merely in its integrity but in increased efficiency, has been, and will no doubt continue to be, a very great strain. 'G. M. E.' is by no means the only helper whose death has left us in many ways much the poorer. Our subscribers share the common lot of humanity, and their vacant places are not easily filled. Yet if our position is to be maintained, filled they must be.

"The generosity of former friends, and the voluntary help in superintendence, leave the present subscriptions almost entirely free for the actual work of the Mission. We are, moreover careful to avoid overlapping, for while we recognise the excellent work of our own nurses we gladly acknowledge that of other societies. The whole Mission at present is alive and very busy. The good, quiet Christian character of our women, and their true sympathy with their people, are a source of constant thankfulness to those at the centre."

Communications for Mrs. Selfe Leonard may be addressed to the office of the Mission, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, W.C.

Trust or Worry?

A WORD FOR THE NEW YEAR.

A friend of mine stands on the brink of what is here called "ruin"—in a year, husband, money, and health have been taken from her, and she finds herself past middle life thrown—was I going to write those stereotyped words, "on the cold charity of a hard world"? No—thrown on the tender mercies of her trusted God and Father! Some who read this may shrug their shoulders, and mentally exclaim, "Poor thing!" for there is an immense amount of unbelief among believers.

I know a man, a Christian, established, rich, who will trust God with everything but his prosperity. A fall anywhere on the money market, an alarm on 'change, a tremor in stocks or shares, and he is a miserable mortal. "Yes, yes, it's all very well to talk," he will say, "I could trust God with my poverty; but you never know what's going to happen through those rascals in the City!" Let my readers disentangle this quibble, if they can. "And so you have lost everything!" said one, to my friend. "Oh, no," she replied, "I have not lost trust in God. I can wait, I can even starve, but I cannot doubt."

That is the spirit in which we need to begin the New Year. If I trust, I do not worry; if I worry I certainly do not trust. Which is it to be for 1893? If we realised the necessity there is for discipline, the blessing that often comes with or out of an illness; the gain to character that accompanies some pecuniary loss; the power to understand, to comprehend more fully the purposes of God and life that is added to us on the death of, or disappointment in, a loved one; the spiritual up-lifting, the heart-awakening, the increased range of vision, that are the concomitants of all experience—heavenly experience—should we fret or worry? Should we dread anything that might come to us?

After all, it must come to this—our faith is very much a thing of sight: a cluster of figures in a pass-book, our standing in society, may constitute our chief articles of faith. And if any doubt this, or condemn it as too severe or crude a judgment, I would ask them to look round among those known to them, and in the various ups and downs of their friends and their friends' faith they may verify it.

But this shall not make us cynical or critical of the faith of others, or doubtful of our own. There are thousands of unknown Bella Cooks and George Müllers amongst God's children—God's tried children. Standing on the threshold of 1893, it shall be our prayer that we may have more of that spirit of holy uncarefulness which prompted the words: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord."

Far too many of us carry the waymarks of our pilgrimage in our faces—the fret, the trouble anticipated, the worry indulged in, have left behind them the ruts of the spiritual Car of Juggernaut.

The doctors tell us that the surest destroyer of brain power and nerve force is worry; and it is worry, in many forms, that saps the strong, inner family life of the churches. A prominent church member was rallied on the long countenance he had lately presented to the world. "The fact is," he confided to the other, "I am troubling about fifteen or sixteen competitions I have entered." "Competitions at your time of life! What kind of competitions?" asked his friend. "Guessing competitions," said the church member, "I shall make a matter of £100 if I win—it's the suspense that troubles me."

Comment on this is needless. I asked a poor woman: "What do you understand by faith?" "Trusting God in a straight line," was her answer. We lose faith as we get off the "straight line"—we flounder in slippery places, and then begin to cry out. But oh, let us say to our Father, as we said to our mothers when we were children: "Forgive me, and I shall not want to do it again!"

We will encourage one another in the good way; we will lift up our eyes to the hills, whence comes our help; we will remember the good hand of our God upon us, and go no more in fear and trembling for imagined troubles.

"What do you believe your Father says to you every morning?" asked one, of a bright, happy Christian woman, who had many cares, a bad husband, and very small means. "'My child, don't worry,' is what I always hear," was the reply. It is a beautiful message from the throne for us—a word to comfort and calm us—"My child, do not worry."

Hundreds of advertisements nowadays promise a cure for wrinkles, so that wrinkles must be pretty general. The greatest wrinkle-cure is, "Don't worry, carry your cares to God, and leave them with Him." It is such a simple cure that all do not believe it. Let us cultivate the "things that make for our peace"—the things that are "unseen and eternal," and then you and I, and all for whom we pray, will have taken the first step into a new blessing and a Happy New Year.

S.

Two days before Christmas, 1888, I found a friend at the station who was going away for the holidays. Knowing that she was a hard worker, who was often in arrears, I told her that I had got through my own work and could help if she was behindhand with hers. She asked me to go to the hospital and see a man named S. "There is nothing in particular to say to him," she said. "Tell him I was too busy to say good-bye, and cheer him up." I asked if S. were a Christian? She shook her head. "Not that I know of."

S. was in a ward filled with decorations, which he was helping two nurses and some patients to make up. He took me into another ward, in which were two patients asleep. We sat down by the fire and talked softly. I told him of Christmas in Germany, and he talked of his village home and his family.

Suddenly I heard The Voice saying, "Ask him to serve Me." Of course, I stopped short to listen, and S. looked up at me inquiringly. I said, hurriedly, "Lord, I don't know S. at all. What shall I say to him?" I turned to S. and said: "S., would you like to serve the Lord Jesus?" He did not answer. "It is a pity that Christ should not be born to you this Christmas," I went on.

"Yes, miss," said S.

"You don't want to leave the fag-end of your life for Him, do you?" No answer. The leading had ceased, so I said no more.

Presently S. said: "How can I?"

"How can you do what?" "Serve Him." "Do you want to?" "Yes." "Then we will tell Jesus Christ that before we go any further." So we did.

Then I said: "First you have to come to Him. You have done that? He says: 'Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out.' Do you believe that?" A long pause. S. looked troubled. "I'd like to believe it," he said.

I showed him an envelope, and said, "Look here, S., in this envelope is a Christmas card. You shall have it." He thanked me. "What is the use of saying 'thank you' if it belongs to me? It is mine till you take it." "It is very kind of you, miss," said S. "No use saying that, you have not taken it."

At last S. turned round, and took the envelope out of my hand. "There," I said, "how did you know there was any card in it?" "You told me," he said. "You believed me?" "Yes, miss." "Christ says, 'I will in no wise cast out.' All you now have to do is to take his word for it, and come for forgiveness."

S.'s face lighted up, "I see it now. All right, miss. I've come. I've taken it." "Shall we thank Him?" "Yes, indeed," said S., whose face was radiant.

"How will you do about all the past time which is lost?" I asked. "Will you do all you can to make it up?"

"I will begin at once," S. said earnestly. "I'll try with the men in here, and when I'm well I will try at home. What shall I say?" "Keep on asking the Lord; He will tell you."

I suggested that he should at once write to Miss W., as it was, of course, her doing that I had come. He agreed, and two or three days later I heard from Miss W. that she had had a long letter from S., rejoicing in his newly-found Saviour. "It was all that card," he said to me one day. "I never understood before that I only had to put out my hand and take the pardon."

I only saw him a few times after this, as Miss W. came home, and S. soon after returned to his village. My friend has had several letters from him, all speaking of his joy in God's service, and of his longing to do more work for Him.

I have not heard of S. very lately, but when last I heard of him he was in the Master's service.

MILDMAY.

The mere mention of this name will awaken a host of happy recollections in the minds of many Christian workers in all parts of the world. The great conference gatherings June after June have made it "familiar in our mouths" as any "household word." But we imagine that only a small proportion of those who have attended these gatherings know, with any degree of exactness, of the multifarious and varied Christian agencies which centre in the Conference Hall and its adjuncts. Hitherto there has been some excuse for such ignorance, because there has been no comprehensive and adequate record of the institutions published in a permanent form. Mildmay, we are happy to state, has at last found a capable historian.* Miss Cooke is an American, and came to England it appears two years ago to study the deaconesses' work under Mrs. Pennefather. She sensibly entered on her quest in the capacity of a practical worker in the institution, and thus gained an ample acquaintance with and insight into the work in all its ramifications.

The result is a charmingly written, and of course reliable, story of the origin, growth, and latest developments of all the co-related agencies for ministering to the needs of the body and the soul. We are tempted to indulge in a number of extracts, but probably the closing paragraphs of the closing chapter, giving a summary of the weekly work done, will provoke in the reader a desire to know more and to possess the book itself; if so, we shall heartily rejoice:—

"Each week nearly two thousand mothers are gathered; in addition to the spiritual instruction which forms a part of the service, they are helped to make the most of what little money they have, by clothing clubs, penny banks, etc.

"On Sunday afternoons about the same number of men are taught by deaconesses in Bible classes, where much encouragement is given by the changed characters of the men, many of whom have been recruited in the night-schools from the ranks of drunkenness.

"Hundreds of men and lads are rescued through these night schools and institutes. Thousands of children are gathered from the streets into children's bands, and taught to love God's Word. They also learn lessons of gentleness, cleanliness, and order.

"More than two thousand bunches of flowers, with texts attached, are sent out every week during the season by the Mildmay Flower Mission, into hospitals and into the homes of the suffering, to cheer the weary hearts, and remind them of God's love.

"Many thousands of garments are distributed through the mission to the very poor. This ministry of love is one of the most touching. Sometimes a large packet of three hundred garments, quite new, is opened; to see the joy of the deaconesses there is very exciting, and their appearance on the way to the station is ludicrous—laden with sundry boxes, parcels, hats, shoes, quite needing Briareus himself with his 'hundred hands.' The secondhand clothing is also very generously supplied. English people are thoughtful and they have their rewards.

"Thousands receive attention and medicine every week through the Medical Missions, which are well attended. The hospitals are nearly always full, and the convalescent home also.

"It is a constant ministry of love. The one aim of Mildmay in its manifold labour is to win souls for Christ."

We would add that the book contains fine portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Pennefather, and illustrations of the various branch buildings, etc.

CHINESE IN LONDON.—Recently Mrs. Storr, of Harrogate, invited friends of all the Christian Churches in the town to a drawing-room meeting to hear from Mrs. Piercy, wife of Rev. George Piercy, an account of the work being done amongst the 2,500 Chinese who are resident or occasional visitors on business in London. Mrs. Piercy gave a short history of her husband's mission to China, and then detailed the difficulties of their present position. She concluded by an appeal for Christian sympathy and support, which resulted in £11 being given to the support of the mission. Mrs. Piercy will be pleased to address gatherings on behalf of this good cause. Address: 276, Burdett-road, London, E.

For the Young.

GROWING CHILDREN.

DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,—I wonder how much each you has grown since January 1. I heard of a ntleman the other day who, every New Year's y, makes each of his children stand up straight ainst a doorpost, and cuts a notch in the wood just ve the child's head, to find out how much he has wn during the year. Boys and girls do grow very t, and there would be something seriously wrong h their health if it were not so. Of course it is e to grow up tall and straight, but there are other ys of growing too. Suppose we have a New Year's k about it together.

I fancy all children are ambitious to grow up like nebody they know, they have some person in their oughts who is their pattern. I used to wish to like my mother, because she was good and gentle, d everybody loved her. Now, you will find e very best Pattern that any boy or girl can ever ve in the last verse of the second chapter of ke's Gospel. The Holy Child Jesus is the ttern which every child should follow. We do t forget that He was God always, but in his man nature He grew just as every boy and girl y and ought to grow.

Our verse tells us of four ways in which Jesus w when He was a boy on earth; and, as we talk out them, I want you to find out whether you ve really grown in the same way through 1892. e are not perfect all at once, but every year ought find us more like our Pattern, oughtn't it?

1. "Jesus increased in wisdom"—that means He de progress and grew in wisdom. I fancy I heard nebody saying, "Well, I have certainly grown re like my Pattern in that. I know a great deal re geography, history, grammar, music, French, d all sorts of things, than I knew last year!" s, I am sure you do; I expect some of you are ite little wiseacres by this time; but I wonder ether you have all grown in the best and est wisdom also. There are two things which, en well learnt, make boys and girls wise God's sight. The first thing is when ey have found out that they have sinful arts, so apt to lead them wrong; and weak hearts much too weak to fight successfully alone against nptation and sin; and the second thing is when ey have found out that the Lord Jesus Christ is th able and willing to wash those sinful hearts ite and clean in his precious blood, and to engthen those weak hearts to overcome evil, so g as they look to Him, and trust Him day by day. e you wise in this way, dear boy, dear girl? If seek to grow more in this best knowledge. If t, oh! won't you begin to-day? The New Year a good time to begin, and Jesus says to you, "I e them that love Me, and those that seek Me rly shall find Me" (Prov. viii. 17). Then,

2. "Jesus increased in stature." Well, you have wn taller since last New Year's Day, and a whole ar older; but I fancy our text means growing an "all-round" sort of way, because, you see, r body is not the only part that has to grow. I ow a brave, kind, clever lad, who goes into adful fits of temper when things do not please n. I think there is room for that boy to grow in ntleness and self-control. And I know a girl who steady and plodding with her lessons, and who is d and helpful, but who has bad sulky fits now d then when she cannot have her own way. I nk it would be good for her to learn to yield some- nes, and to grow in forgiveness and forbearance. God wants you, dear children, to get rid of the ak places and the sharp angles in your character. e knows how difficult it is for you to overcome bad bits and tempers, but He is always ready to help ery boy and girl who really seeks to be free. He n make you strong in your weakest place, and en you look to Jesus to do for you what you can- t do by yourself, you will find that you are grow- g steadily in God's "all-round" way—not perfect at once, but still growing, really growing.

3. "Jesus increased . . . in favour with d." It is not quite easy for us to understand w the Lord Jesus could grow in God's favour, for know that God was always pleased with Him; t I think it will help us if we remember that this rse speaks of Christ in His human nature. e Holy Child Jesus grew in wisdom, He learned know God's will better, and we read of Him eb. iii. 2) that He was faithful to God "in all," d you know, dear boys and girls, that it costs something to be faithful to God in all things—to confess Him before schoolfellows and playfellows—it means being mocked and laughed at, and sometimes persecuted for it; but if you are true to God always it will be said of you, as of the dear Lord Jesus, "He grows—she grows—in favour with God." And again it is said of Jesus, "He learned obedience" (Heb. v. 8) first to God, his Heavenly Father, and then we read He was subject to his earthly parents (Luke ii. 51).

Obedience does not come easily to all children: some like to have their own way, and think they know better than father and mother, but Jesus Christ was obedient, and God was pleased with that obedience. We have to think and speak of the Lord Jesus Christ and these things with great reverence, for He was always God, even when a little child; but He is put before us as the example and pattern which every child should follow, and so you may know that when you have become faithful to God in all things, and obedient to God and your parents as He was, God will be pleased with you too. I wonder how many of you have grown in these two ways through 1892? To know that God is pleased with us is better than anything else on earth. Then

4. "Jesus increased . . . in favour with . . . man." I don't think we need say much about that, for when a child has grown in the best wisdom, and in God's all-round way of character, and in faithfulness and obedience, so that God is pleased with him, you may be quite sure that parents and teachers and friends will be better pleased with him too. But have you grown really more like your great Pattern through the past year? Is God better pleased or less pleased with you?

I think if I were you I would have a talk with the Lord Jesus Christ about it this New Year's time, and so make sure of growing this year. The Saviour always keeps those safe and happy who trust, love, and obey Him, and I want you all to have a really happy New Year, and I shall pray that it may be to each one of you the best growing year you have ever had yet.

Your loving friend,

Brighton. ONE OF THE GROWN-UPS.

TAKING DOLLY TO THE PAWNBROKER'S.

There are a great many pathetic incidents connected with the lives of poor children that are never heard of outside of the immediate vicinity. A few days since a little girl, who had seen her mother take a ring and other valuables to the pawnbroker's to get money to buy medicine and food while her father was sick and out of work, tried to pawn her dolly.

The mother was taken sick from overwork and care of the father, and told the little girl that she did not know how they would get anything to eat. The year before this, the little girl had received the doll from the Christmas tree at the mission school. She had taken great pleasure in it, but it was all she had, and the only thing she could take to the pawnbroker to get some money on. She wrapped up the dolly in a piece of paper and went to the shop. The pawnbroker was very angry when he unrolled the package and saw the dolly. The paint was off from its face, and the hair was in a tangle; the dress, also, was very much soiled. The pawnbroker was a heartless man. "Get out," he said, throwing the dolly on the floor and breaking it to pieces.

A lady who was passing the door chanced to see the man throw the dolly down, and when the little girl came out of the shop crying, she said, "What is the matter, little girl?" The child told her pathetic story, and the lady, who was a "King's Daughter," and very much interested in tenement-house work, went home with her.

When she found that the little girl's story was true, she told it to the circle of ten to which she belonged, and they helped the family in so many good ways that the father and mother soon got well, and the father got a place where he could earn enough to get the necessary food and clothes for those he loved so well. And you will all be glad to know that they gave the little girl a new dolly, too. This is a true story. I hope you will be thankful to God for giving you such a good home and loving parents, and try to help the poor children all you can.—N.Y. Evangelist.

THE NEW YEAR.

"In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy path."—Prov. iii. 6.

COME for a little while apart
From out the busy throng,
And join with us with heart and voice
In one thanksgiving song:
And standing on the threshold
Of another opening year
Let willing hearts above the past
An Ebenezer rear.

Go back in memory o'er the days
Whose sum is now complete.
Count up each mercy undeserved,
And render homage meet.
Not one good thing hath lacked throughout,
Withheld not sun nor rain:
The seed time in abundance gave
A harvest of the same.

Still onward trace the silent way
Of faithful memory's store,
Nor shrink to pass that "vale of tears,"
Though wounded hearts are sore,
But praise Him for the healing Tree,
That sweetened Marah's stream,
And led us forth so tenderly
To Elim's palms of green.

Were there some stormy waves to breast,
A heated plain to tread—
Without the whispered "Peace, be still,"
"'Tis I; be not afraid"?
Ah no—the measure of his love
Our every need supplied:
Himself a refuge from the storm
"A Rock" wherein to hide.

And now along the path of life
Once more we take our way,
Not knowing where that way will lead,
Or where the path will stay.
Yet sure—whatever good or ill
The coming days unfold—
"His presence shall go with us"
As with chosen ones of old.

S. H.

I WISH YOU A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

A YEAR, the happiest of all that you have ever known
And followed by yet happier as time glides quickly on!
Upheld by Him who meteth out to each the dail, might,
To tread life's pathway loyally, to conquer in the fight.
There is no greater bliss on earth than knowing all the way
You are redeemed by precious blood, He is your strength and stay!
No sin can rise in judgment 'gainst those whom He forgives,
No foe can harm or hinder, whilst our Redeemer lives!
In sunshine and in shadow that Friend is ever near,
The brightest days to gladden, the gloomiest to cheer!
Then start with fresh allegiance, lay your all at Jesu's feet,
And live, and long, and look for Him until Himself you greet!
His honour be your watchword, his service your delight,
His needy ones your constant care, his Word of Truth your light!
May the smile of his approval fill your soul with rest and peace,
That earth can never take away, and only heaven increase!

MR. GEORGE BLAIKLOCK has concluded a very successful seven days' temperance mission in Mere, Wilts.

"Early Religion of Israel."

Modern criticism undertakes to solve three problems found professedly in the earlier Scriptures. Their method of composition it asserts to have been in the first instance a collation and piecing together of several distinct and distinguishable documents; this composite production being afterwards subjected to revision by more than one editor. Still further, possessed of peculiar penetration, modern critics profess to be able to unravel the complicated network and to assign each separate thread to its own proper author. Lastly, they deny the truth of the Biblical history of Israel's religion, and from certain surmises of their own, supported, they allege, by prophetic writings admittedly genuine, they endeavour to reconstruct the story along the lines of actual fact. Thus the problems dealt with may be briefly named in three words, Composition, Authorship, History.

Of these three the last is the most important and fundamental. For if the Biblical history be true, the belief common to both Jews and Christians down to the middle of last century as to the books of Moses receives the strongest possible support. Therefore a close examination both of the Biblical history and of the critical history (which some seek to substitute for it) in the light of all available facts seems the most promising method if we desire to reach a sound and satisfactory conclusion.

Acting on the conviction that it is from the historical side the faith can best be defended and modern theories dissipated into thin air, the Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Glasgow has written a book which may fairly claim to be the most telling, thoroughgoing, and trustworthy argument from the conservative standpoint ever propounded in our country.*

Dr. Robertson spent some dozen years of his life in familiar intercourse with Orientals on the very borders of Palestine, and is therefore doubly qualified, by knowledge of peoples and languages, to speak with authority on the subject he has chosen. He has also evidently read with unusual care the writings of the more advanced school of criticism, and he has examined many of the statements made by its scholars concerning Biblical history and prophecy at first hand. Refusing to accept the critical interpretation, he has allowed the Bible to speak for itself. The result is intensely interesting and useful. Plausible criticisms when confronted with the actual text suddenly wax old and are ready to vanish away. Perhaps Dr. Robertson's purpose may be best expressed in his own words :—

"I am less concerned to defend a theory, than to claim for the Biblical writers—what I think they have not received—fair play. On both sides of this controversy, the books have been wrangled over, as if they had been some legal deed or Act of Parliament; while the personality of the writers has been left out of view. I am not opposed to criticism, although I am free to confess I do not acknowledge criticism in the sense in which it is sometimes spoken of, as if it were some infallible science. But I plead for a criticism of a saner sort, such as we should employ in the ordinary intercourse of life, or apply to a modern author; a criticism that shall start by admitting that the writer possesses ordinary intelligence, and knows fairly well what he is writing about; that shall then interpret his words in a fair and common-sense fashion, and be bold enough, when necessary, to confess its own ignorance. If some things should be found in these pages, indicating that I am incapable of following a critical argument, as these arguments are conducted, they will at least be of some service if they stir up the unwary reader to examine the foundations of the argument for himself. What is scepticism in one age becomes credulity in the next. The critical theory is fast becoming traditional, and is becoming accepted by multitudes on no better grounds than those on which the former view became traditional. It is now high time to apply scepticism to the prevailing theory, so that the strength or weakness of its foundations may be made manifest."

With Dr. Robertson's preliminary critique we are thoroughly in agreement. Before we can pretend to understand the Biblical writers, we must credit them with at least the possession of ordinary common sense. If this were generally done, many of the objections so readily raised would not be even dreamt of. To meet the difficulties professedly discovered, the most effectual method is sharply and severely to criticise the supposed difficulties themselves. This the Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Glasgow has done in painstaking detail, and the result is a volume which must be seriously reckoned with by modern assailants of the Bible. A book which within a few weeks of publication has already reached a third edition cannot be ignored or treated with contempt. Notwithstanding the author's modesty, we must maintain this to be one of the clearest and most complete contributions to the present controversy in recent times.

THE BALLYMENA REVIVAL.

I read with deep interest your account of the work of God in Ballymena, carried on by Mr. David Rea, both in the Gospel Hall on week nights and in the Protestant Hall on Sunday nights. A further reference to it might be useful to stir up believers to more faith and prayer, and to work while it is called day.

Truly the power and presence of God have marked the meetings from the first, and the interest seems only to deepen and widen both in town and country. After packing fifteen or sixteen hundred people into the Protestant Hall, hundreds on more than one occasion have had to leave on Lord's Day evenings for want even of standing room. A heavy snowstorm on Dec. 4 did not suffice to keep them away, and many were standing under it waiting for the doors to be opened over an hour before the time for commencing the meeting.

The last few weeks were most remarkable. Four meetings a day were held most of the days—one at half-past ten for prayer, another at one for the Gospel, at half-past five prayer, and again at seven for the gospel. About a hundred persons were present at some of the meetings for prayer, the two of which have been kept up daily since the work commenced. It is most blessed to see the harmony and union of heart manifested amongst all classes of Christians, and barriers which hitherto had kept them apart are vanishing in a remarkable way under the melting power of the love of Christ.

It is a new thing in the country to find people willing to give up their work and attend Gospel meetings, and to fill a good-sized barn and hall at 1 o'clock in the day; some walked seven miles and were over sixty years of age.

It is not unusual to hear the bitter cry of distress from those convinced of sin, while the word is being spoken. I saw one who had to be carried out, being in soul agony; her cries outside were clearly heard inside. They had to bring her in again, and she found peace ere the meeting separated. On another occasion while Mr. Rea was singing a solo just before commencing to preach, one gave a terrible wail of anguish, and was falling off the seat when laid hold of; with several others he found peace that night. Truly it was a touching sight and one not soon to be forgotten, to see parents and children, friends and relatives, weep over each other.

About four miles from Ballymena is the village of Clough. Here meetings were commenced on Tuesday evening, December 13th, in the Baptist house, kindly lent for the occasion. The first meeting was most encouraging; notwithstanding a dark night and heavy rain the place was filled, and the Lord's presence was felt as a deep reality. The interest and numbers increased nightly until Friday, when many people could not get in. On Lord's day afternoon, long before the hour, the house was crowded, and the seats from a meeting-room close at hand were brought in, but sufficient people were there to fill the place twice over. Many of them will praise the Lord through eternity for being present that night.

Will those who read this account of the Lord's work remember it at the Throne of Grace, and ask for the needed strength, both of mind and body, for the brother who is carrying it on?

J. B. Kingston.

REV. J. McNEILL IN EDINBURGH.

This evangelist closed up his first year of itinerant Gospel service by a fortnight's mission in the "West-endy East-windy" city of Edinburgh. It is generally admitted that the season of the year was not the most favourable for such a special effort; but of course in a large city there is always plenty of material for good audiences. The spacious Corn Exchange in the Grassmarket was secured, and into it night after night there flocked great congregations to hear the earnest preacher. A noteworthy feature of the attendance was the large proportion of working men to be found in the meetings.

Mr. McNeill's addresses, it need not be said, were as characteristic as ever. His appeals were, for the most part, weighty and powerful. The cogency and suitability of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, to satisfy at once the reasoning powers and the spiritual needs of mankind, were pourtrayed in a vivid way, so as to shut up the hearers to the immediate acceptance of the truth. It has been a common experience in Mr. McNeill's meetings throughout the year for people to make the great decision while the address was going on. This was found to be largely the case in Edinburgh. As a consequence the after-meeting was not such a prominent element.

The afternoon Bible Readings in the Free Assembly Hall were seasons greatly valued by Christians, and were a source of much stimulus and help in the devout life.

Mr. J. H. Burke did good service in the department of Gospel song. His clear, penetrating notes rang through the large auditorium of the Corn Exchange, and the sweet message found ready entrance into the ears and hearts of the people. Mr. Burke had an able and willing ally in Miss Darling, whose rich contralto voice blended finely with his tenor. Last Sunday, the closing day of the mission in the Corn Exchange, Mr. Burke was absent in Ireland, and Miss Darling sang the solos.

Some little excitement was caused in Edinburgh by an incident at one of the Free Assembly Hall meetings. Mr. McNeill was expatiating at some length on the prevalent craving for titular honours among his fellow ministers. Prof. W. G. Blaikie, who happened to be sitting close by, made the very natural retort to the speaker, sotto voce, that he had himself accepted the title of "Reverend." Mr McNeill did not extricate himself from the dilemma very gracefully, and this little mistake in tactics, of course, afforded the unsanctified evening papers food for some sarcastic criticism.

Special mention ought to be made of the three meetings for students which Mr. McNeill addressed in the Oddfellows' Hall. They were marked by good attendances and a deep religious interest. At the closing meeting it is believed that as many as fifty of these young men—the flower of the academic community—professed decision for Christ.

Early in the new year Mr. McNeill resumes work in Ireland; we pray that he may have "a great door and effectual" to the hearts of the Irish people with whom he has not a few things in common.

THE LATE REV. G. W. McCREE,

BAPTIST MINISTER, BOROUGH ROAD, SOUTHWARK.

THE subject of our present sketch recently departed this life, after a long period of Christian service. He was a many-sided man, respected alike for his social affability and his devotion to the cause of God.

GEORGE WILSON McCREE was born of comparatively humble parentage, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, on April 28, 1822. He had, therefore, completed his "three score years and ten." His early years may be summed up in a few sentences. He assisted his father in business, often reading far into the night in order to improve his mind. He had an insatiable love of books, which influenced him to the day of his death.

Like many others of God's children, Mr. McCree, humanly speaking, owed his conversion to the quiet but persistent ministry of a woman—his only sister. When at a Primitive Methodist Prayer Meeting, "it pleased God to reveal his Son in him," this loving sister saw the desire of her heart in her brother's acceptance of those "great and precious promises," which ever afterwards he prized so highly and preached so faithfully. Forthwith "he conferred not with flesh and blood—neither went he up to Jerusalem to those who were Apostles before him"—but believing most firmly in his Divine call to the work and office of the Christian ministry, he set about spreading the glad tidings of salvation up and down Westmoreland and Cumberland. Pitmen listened to him; children greeted him; and many were helped on their way Zionwards by his early utterances.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Lombardi & Co., 13, Pall Mall East, London, S.W.)

About this time he wrote a tract based on the principles of the Peace Society, which principles he never ceased to advocate. He heard the late John Cassell lecture on temperance in his native town, and was induced to sign the pledge. The temperance cause found in him a life-long friend. Having joined the Baptist denomination, he became the pastor of the church at Monkwearmouth. Soon afterwards he removed to Sunderland and Boroughbridge, Yorkshire. During his pastorate at the latter place he met the lady who became his wife. She was a brewer's daughter, but adopted his temperance principles, and upholds them still. The late Joseph Sturge engaged him to travel in the Midlands as a temperance missionary, and for a time he resided in Nottingham. Removing to Norwich, he met the late Rev. William Brock and the late Sir S. Morton Peto, Bart., who conjointly brought him to London in November, 1848, on the occasion of the opening of Bloomsbury Chapel.

Mr. McCree immediately went to work in St. Giles' hard by, and commenced what was to be his life work. For twenty-six years he laboured among the poor and destitute of that district. Some of the chief agencies he employed may be mentioned, as they all pointed to the one great aim of his work—the salvation of those by whom he was surrounded. He preached a full and free Gospel in his Mission Halls, in the open air, in the kitchens of lodging houses, and superintended Sunday-schools, mothers' meetings, penny banks, and temperance entertainments of a very high order. He was the first to introduce children's dinners; managed large excursions in the summer, when those outings were not so general as now; carried on a very extensive correspondence; marshalled a large band of district visitors and tract distributors; and in the winter seasons was the almoner of large sums of money sent him for distribution at his own discretion by some of our leading City merchants and philanthropists. For many years he was secretary of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union. He was one of the three founders of the London Temperance Hospital, Hampstead-road, and was on the committee of the Mansion House Council for the improvement of the dwellings of the poor.

His sermons were carefully prepared, eloquently delivered, and thoroughly evangelical and practical in tone. His two chief lectures—"Day and Night in St. Giles'" and "Lights and Shades of Life in London"—have been heard by delighted audiences in most towns in England. As a lecturer he had great power over those he addressed; he was brimful of both humour and pathos. God had given him a voice of marvellous sweetness and great power, and perhaps it was to this "talent" he owed so much of his success as a public speaker.

Mr. McCree always pleaded for Local Option. Throughout the whole of his work in St. Giles', he was aided—in fact, upheld—by the money and influence of the late Dr. Brock and the friends at Bloomsbury. He was never known to pass unnoticed a humble worker. The most obscure were his greatest friends. He was privileged to hand to Marian Bowers the Bible out of which incident sprang the London Bible and Domestic Female Union.

Shortly after the death of Dr. Brock, the church at the Borough-road Baptist Chapel, Southwark, called Mr. McCree to be its pastor. He responded, and occupied that honourable position for eighteen years. He worked on the same lines in the south of London as he had done in St. Giles'; therefore, but little need be said as to his maturer years. The church flourished under his pastoral care, and "the least of these" always found in Mr. McCree a true friend, a wise counsellor, and a cheerful companion.

About a year ago a painful malady attacked him, and he "set his house in order" and calmly awaited the summons. His near relatives gladly veil his final sufferings from public knowledge. One day when a brother minister dilated on these, Mr. McCree responded, in tones of great firmness, "NEVERTHELESS, the foundation of God standeth sure." He leaves a widow—who nursed him with heroic fortitude and great tenderness, till an old friend provided the much-needed help—and two sons, one of whom, the elder, has been for many years the Secretary of the Midnight Meeting Movement.

Mr. McCree was "gathered in" on November 25th, like a shock of corn fully ripe, and he was laid to rest in Abney Park Cemetery, side by side with William Brock, his friend and fellow-labourer. Mr. McCree was a good organiser as well as an indefatigable worker. He wrote a number of pamphlets and tracts on Gospel and temperance topics.

Our lamented friend was one of that useful class of pastors—hard working and tender-souled, persevering and resourceful—which are specially in request at the present time.

AFRICAN INDUSTRIAL MISSIONS.

By F. S. Arnot.

In reference to Bishop Taylor's letter on his "African Industrial Missions" in your last week's issue, I should like to ask a few questions :—

1st. How does Bishop Taylor propose to get African children of such tender years under the care of his "missionary matrons," unless the parents have been first brought under the influence of the Gospel? I hope he does not propose buying them, as so long as missionaries buy (or redeem) children, they only encourage kidnapping. Africans do not sell their own children, but those of another tribe, caught in the bush or fields. My experience has been that it is much more difficult to get young children in Africa to care for than in England, unless they are maimed or deformed in some serious way, except by purchase.

2nd. I grant that the little children of Africa "bear the same relation to God as the children of Christian countries," but surely we have no Scriptural warrant for limiting the sphere of God's power to children of tender years?

3rd. Many, I am sure, would be glad to hear of the results of Bishop Taylor's past years of work in Africa, as well as of his plans for future work, as I confess his comprehensive scheme of education is very dependent upon the ability and spirituality of the "missionary matrons" and teaching artisans. For my part, I believe in the Gospel being "the power of God unto salvation"—i.e., the work must begin there, whatever may follow in the line of necessary teaching and training. Then, also, the children of the tribe will be brought under the influence of godly teachers by the natural way of parental assistance in the work. But to talk of getting hold of the children first, is to me an impossibility.

The following testimony of Mr. Richards, of Banza Manteka, on the Congo, was to me most valuable :—

"No! that [education work] is mere waste of time at first. When the people are converted, then have schools for children. . . . But preaching with a view to conversion : that is God's commandment, and this is the missionary's work—his prime, principal, paramount, peculiar duty.

"When people are converted, they need teaching. . . . The Spirit of God seems to make them intelligent. They learn to read fast; they open little schools in other villages to teach their own townsfolk to do the same. They send their children, too, fast enough, as soon as they are converted—though before we had actually to ransom slave children in order to get a school at all! The heathen want to be paid for coming to school!"

I witnessed the truth of the latter paragraph at Shoshong, in Bechuanaland, where the business of half the day seemed to be teaching one another, old and young, the art of reading. But they did more than that; they built comfortable houses for themselves, and relieved their wives of the heavy part of the field work.

Again, in Bailundu and Bihé, the missionaries of the "American Board" have had the same dual blessing upon their labours—the idle savage, by the power of God, changed in heart and life. The Lord has not given me to see results anything commensurate with the expectations I had on first going to Africa eleven years ago; doubtless to the end that I might learn to "look not on my own things, but also on the things of others." But I have seen the truth of God illuminate darkest hearts and minds.

Sure I am of this, that Africa is not in need of multitudes of Christian workers. Such may, and often do, in fact, increase the difficulties of the situation. But Africa does want sent and chosen men of God. And let the Church in home lands not "cast away her confidence (in God), which hath great recompense of reward." The temptation of the present day is to grow weary of well-doing and look around impatiently for new methods.

Erfurt Lodge, Greenwich, Dec. 23, 1892.

BATANGA, WEST AFRICA.—Mr. Good wrote on August 13, having returned, after an absence of twenty-three days, from the first of his proposed exploring expeditions. He had reached a point in the Bule country, about ninety miles north of east from Batanga, whence he turned north-west to Bongolo and thence by another route, back to the coast. He was in excellent health.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S ORPHANAGES.

A deeply interesting report has been issued of the work carried on by Deacon Abraham at Geog Tapa, Oroomiah, Persia, in connection with the Nestorian Orphanages. The Deacon writes :—

"During the last two years sixteen orphans have left our schools. Three have gone to the American College, seven to their friends, six are servants. Out of these, two girls have married, one from the Orphanage, to whom we gave an Old and New Testament and hymnbook for her marriage portion.

"At the beginning of 1892 we had thirty-eight orphans, two-thirds boys. Now we have forty, and our entire circle numbers fifty-six souls, besides four strangers who have taken shelter with us during the winter—sixty in all. Three former orphans are with us, two as helpers and one for joiner's work. I am often asked, 'How is it that your orphans, as a rule, turn out to be clever and industrious, so different from children who have parents?' 'I often envy them, and wish my own children were like them.'

"I reply, 'The reason is because in the Orphanage they are taught to be humble, are fed on simple food, at regular meals, dressed in a suitable and becoming manner, are taught to be industrious, to behave well, and to speak properly; besides which they are trained in the fear of the Lord, to read and love his Word, to keep the Sabbath Day holy, and to walk in his laws. We pray continually for the conversion of each orphan, so we have a good hope of them; they are also taught many useful arts, according to their ability. Very soon after they enter they begin to learn many things different to what they have been accustomed, and find out the value of regular employment.'

"Last spring a half-dressed boy of eight or nine years was brought to me; he had parents, but I was told they had gone to Russia four years previously. This boy was very wild, a brute and savage. The day after he came he began to beat the children, talking bad words, giving nicknames, etc. He was almost like a young untameable lion, and all our admonitions had no effect. Then we had recourse to punishments. His conduct was so notorious that many came on purpose to see him. During a week of prayer one of the elder orphans bent over to hear what he was saying, and he was crying, 'O God, I am your dog. I have sinned much, I pray Thee pardon me much, and do send the Scriptures to our people in Russia.'

"In short, this poor boy is greatly changed by the grace of God, and is putting other orphans to shame. My heart is filled with praise to God for his goodness to him. Some of the orphans have spent such miserable lives before coming to us that our hearts burn toward them. One little girl, whose mother brought her last year, is very delicate. Her mother also was sick, and we sent her to the American Hospital, where she died, and the little one is now an orphan indeed, though she does not yet know it. As the poor we have always with us, so orphans always we have; some are utterly destitute, others who ought to have a little money have been deprived of it by the want of care on the part of their friends. These also have to be watched and cared for."

There are several striking incidents in the report. One of the former inmates writes to the Deacon from Tiflis :—

"Lately I had a discourse with a Roman Catholic. I told him we must do what Scripture tells us to do. He said, 'You Protestants are like Moslems, you have no Cross nor Fast, and you are forbidding drinking like them.' I answered, 'Does not the Scripture say that drunkards will not enter the kingdom of God? You are worshipping pictures, St. Mary, etc.' Then he said, 'I will go and tell of you to the Government, that they may make a prisoner of you.' I said, 'If I be killed, I will say the truth.'"

The Deacon writes :—

"Our doors are never shut against the stranger and the poor. I am now known far and wide as a friend of the orphan and the destitute. Consequently many flock to me from a distance. We seldom pass a night without strangers or friends coming to us. They sometimes stay a week or two, although it is hard for us; but here in the East we must not tell strangers 'I cannot receive you any longer.' I carry on this work with the greatest economy, and we all work hard.'"

The accounts of the work are audited by the American missionaries. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. Henry Tasker, "Brookside," Andover, Hants.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH SEAMEN.

Dear Sir,—The Good News Mission yacht was successfully launched on Tuesday, December 6, at Paignton, without any ceremony, on account of the tide not serving later than 7.30 in the morning of a cold winter day. The usual consecration service will be held on board the Herald of Mercy in Paignton Harbour, and from thence we shall, God willing, move on for our usual work among the fishermen in Devon and Cornwall.

To thousands of sailors and soldiers, recently embarked and sailing from Portsmouth to the Mediterranean, India, China, and elsewhere, we have taken large numbers of bags, well filled with Testaments, Gospel books, etc., etc. This has quite exhausted our stores.

Our facilities with the steam yacht Good News and the Herald of Mercy are now greater than ever. Who will help to load our Gospel ships with the Word of God, good books, thousands of bags, woollen garments, etc., etc.? At this cold season of the year our poor seamen and fishermen are drenched night and day, and many are wrecked. Those escaping death generally lose their all. Warm vests, overalls, steering gloves, or comforters given to them are luxuries indeed, and often win the careless and sometimes drunken seamen for the Saviour's fold.

In our new steamer we purpose to visit many yet unreached seaports, rivers, canals for the preaching of the Gospel. We are wanting to clear all expenses ere we steam away. £170 extra is needed for Lloyd's and Board of Trade surveys, fittings, stools, bedding, crockery, extra ropes, etc.

Yours, very sincerely,

47, Stoke-road, Gosport. Henry Cook.

[We are rejoiced to hear that, in spite of apparently insuperable difficulties, our dear brother Henry Cook has succeeded, by the good hand of God upon him, in having this Good News steamer launched. We warmly commend him to the good offices, spiritually and temporally, of the people of God.—Ed.]

NEW YEAR'S ASPIRATIONS.

By Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, D.D.
Author of "Perfect Through Suffering," etc.

A New Year is dawning. Lord, let it be
A new year of love and labour for Thee!
New be my motives, and new be my aim;
New be my efforts thy sweet smile to gain.
Let, from the Life-tree, new leaves for me fall,
Newly creating me—Christ in all.
New confidence give me;—trust in thy Word,
New graces to deck me, son of my Lord.
New faith the mountains of promise to scale,
Away from the doubts beclouding the vale.
New hope, its anchor to cast on the shore,
Where sin-waves and sorrow-waves break no more.
New love-links to knit my spirit to thine,
And keep me at work, with fervour divine.
New vista-views grant of the world unknown,
New strains of the anthem sung round the Throne.
New be my heart-thirst to see thy face shine;
New be my life-way, thy blessèd will mine!
Thus may I look to receive a "new name,"
Known in the realms of celestial fame.
In "newness of life" let months roll along,
Till I take my part in the grand "new song."

Wanted, Crown Advocates.

It was only a single sentence, lightly spoken on the impulse of the moment, but it was a message from God, and I want to pass it on, in the hope that He may use it to put a new purpose and glory into other lives, as it has already into mine.

We were sitting round the breakfast-table at Keswick when a friend made the remark, "You have never told us about your work in Africa," to which I replied that, as the words would usually be understood, I had as yet no "work in Africa," unless it could be called "work" to enter, as far as possible, into other people's work and interests, to look on at what was being done, and to pray for the workers and those among whom they were working, This called from another the words which have come back to me again and again every day since with ever-increasing power and meaning, "You are watching the case on behalf of the Crown?"

Is it true that, in these days of opening and closing doors, of growing readiness to hear the message of salvation and life on the part of so many, and yet of increasing opposition on the part of so many more, and of the Church's Head is not so much more gifts for missionary work, though from so many sides come the tidings of work straitened and limited for want of necessary funds; nor even an increased number of labourers, though from all lands the cry is sounding louder and louder, "Come over and help us"; as men and women in sympathy with the Lord, who, realising their calling to be his remembrancers, will take it as one great part, if not the chief part, of their life-work, really, constantly, earnestly, to "watch the case on behalf of the Crown," to look on at the great conflict which is being waged day by day with greater concentration and force on both sides, between the powers of Heaven and Hell, between the forces of the Prince of Peace and of the Prince of this World; so watching it that they may be able to pray with the understanding as well as with the spirit; so watching it on the Lord's behalf, that they may see all from his point of view, as it affects his interests and his glory, and may be able to offer such prayers as shall be according to his will, and therefore heard.

THE GREAT NEED OF THE CHURCH

If, in all the details of ordinary life, we thus watched every case as part of this case, in full sympathy with the King, who can say what a difference it would make to the progress of his kingdom?

For it is as a practical thing that the Lord has been setting this before me, and, in its practical working, as a wonderful means of hourly fellowship with Himself. What a different thing the reading of a newspaper becomes when, instead of merely looking to see what is going on in the world as a matter of personal or general interest, we study it for God, to see how his cause is prospering, what He is doing among the nations of the earth, and what attitude they are assuming towards Him; recognising his Hand in all the events of the day, and comparing them with what He has said shall be. Reading it thus, we find in almost every column some new cause of prayer or praise; and the reading, instead of being, as it sometimes has been, a break in the conscious, personal intercourse of our soul with God, becomes a definite means of communion with Him, as we enter into his thoughts and plans for men, and watch the unfolding of his purpose and the fulfilment of his word.

PRAYERFUL STUDY OF MISSIONARY NEWS.

Or take the case of a missionary magazine. How many of us, even in our missionary reading, have read as those who were "watching the case on behalf of the Crown"? Have we not often taken up such magazines as a kind of spiritual relaxation, especially on Sunday evening, when we have been "too tired for anything deep"? How far have we read them as a matter of business as carefully as a lawyer would read up all the facts of the "case" he had undertaken, in order that he might be able to help to bring it to a successful issue? Is it not true that in every trial the result, if not mainly, at any rate materially, depends upon the persevering, painstaking, diligent study and watching of the advocates on either side? How far are we thus helping on the cause of our Lord?

To go back to the missionary magazines, how often we have been content with just glancing over them. If we have friends in the mission field we read carefully every paper in which they are mentioned, and when we lay down the magazine we perhaps even pray in a general way for "all who are working for Thee among the heathen"; but what do we know of real prayerful study of missionary news? When the next number of such a paper reaches you, will you take it up as a "watcher on behalf of the Crown"? When you read of some triumph, great or small, of the Lord over the enemy, will you stop right there and praise Him? When you read of work languishing, of a worker being weary and disappointed, of some who "did run well" going back and walking no more with Jesus, will you lift up your heart in prayer to God for that work, for that labourer, for those backsliders? When you find a story of a recent convert from heathenism or Mohammedanism, will you ask the Lord to make him stand and confess Christ boldly before men?

And then—watch the case. Look out for the next news of those workers and those converts; look out on behalf of the Crown. Even from my small knowledge of missions and missionaries, I am sure the writing of a report would be quite a new thing, if the writer knew that it would be read in such a way as this, and would call forth such a response. Do you think it would give no new impetus to a lonely, discouraged worker to know that his very discouragement, when once it was known, would call forth this kind of prayerful sympathy from a company of Christians at home who were watching what was going on in his distant corner of the harvest-field, and watching on the Lord's behalf?

When once we take our position as those whose business it is to

of God, in individual hearts and lives, and in different communities and nations, we shall find that subjects of prayer will crowd in upon us day by day. Personally, I found this to be so much the case, that before many days it became necessary to keep a list of the "cases" I saw and heard of that needed to be "watched" on God's behalf, and already that "Watchman's Book" has come to be, not only a wonderful interest, including as it does definite subjects of prayer for every quarter of the globe, some only the result of personal watching, others again requests sent in by friends, but also a record of the faithfulness of God, as one after another the answers are received, and the watcher and the King rejoice together.

It is sometimes said that missionaries, and others, too, have a way of writing to ask prayer for certain places and people, and never afterwards mentioning the subjects, nor saying whether the prayer was answered or not. If this should be the experience of any reader of this paper, why not, after waiting in vain for further tidings, write to the missionary and ask for them, saying that you have been praying for the work or the people, and would be glad to know if the answer had come? The very discovery that there was anyone at home so watching and praying would surely be an inspiration to greater zeal and new ardour, and kindle fresh hope in one who might perhaps be just then specially needing it.

We hear that the contributions to a Missionary Society in which we are interested have fallen off, and that the funds are low; we are asked to pray that more gifts may come in, and for the moment we respond in some measure to the request. But how many of us take the trouble to "watch the case"? When the next monthly or quarterly statement of accounts appears, are we watching even to such an extent that we turn up the last "statement" and compare it with this one to see whether the prayer has been answered or not? If not, that the Lord's treasury is not replenished?

IS IT IN NO DEGREE OUR FAULT

And turning from the foreign to the home field, what do we know of this watching on the Lord's behalf? How much would it influence our conduct if we knew more of it? We go to a service or to a meeting, and find it "flat," we go away complaining that there was "no power," the speaker was so nervous, the meeting was so cold, there was "nothing worth listening to." But it never occurred to us that if, instead of judging, we had been watching for God, and pleading with Him for life and power and warmth, the state of things might be changed, still less that if things went on as they were, a large share of the responsibility would be ours, if we, seeing and feeling the lack, were content to criticise, mentally or verbally, when by our "effectual fervent prayer" we might have been instrumental in transforming the whole. Have we ever the right to condemn a work or a worker before men, for whom we have never poured out our heart before God? Shall we ever feel like criticising them, when we have so pleaded for them? Have we never, instead of "watching the case on behalf of the Crown," even watched for the halting of the King's servants?

Shall we have a personal time with God over this? If it is true that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much," can we not see what a change "one short hour spent in his presence might avail to make," not only "within us," but in the heart, and life, and work of many another for whom our faith might "obtain promises," whom the Lord might enable, in answer to our believing cry, to stop the mouths of lions, to subdue kingdoms and work righteousness, to be made strong out of weakness, to wax valiant in fight, to turn to flight armies of aliens? "It came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed, and when he let down his hand Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy ... and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands ... and his hands were steady ... and Joshua discomfited Amalek." "Wherefore lift up the hands that hang down," "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."

Will you

SET YOURSELF APART TO GOD FOR THIS

—to watch all things for Him, to be in your measure a mediator between men and Him? It may take time, but surely in these days too little time is spent in speaking to God on behalf of men, even in comparison with the time spent in speaking to men on behalf of God. And might not our words to man on God's behalf be more used by the Holy Ghost, and do more real work, even if they were fewer than they are, if we gave ourselves much more to the work of pleading for man with the God whose is the kingdom and the power, without whose power all the best words are only words, and will go no further than the ears of those to whom they are spoken? Surely we shall find, too, that God's work done through us personally will gain and not lose by our giving ourselves to watching and praying on behalf of the work of others and the needs of others.

And the Lord can teach us so much more than we have ever yet learned what it means to "pray always," to "pray without ceasing," to live in such an atmosphere of prayer, and such a consciousness of his Presence, that it will become a natural habit to speak to Him at all times, in all places, under all circumstances, of everything we see and hear, so that we shall be able to "stand continually upon the watch-tower," and at the same time to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord."

EURASIAN HOME, BANGALORE.

In the first annual report of the Eurasian Home, Cleveland Town, Bangalore, Miss Anstey tells an interesting story of faithful work on behalf of neglected classes in India. We read:—"Those who visit the home from time to time, and more especially those who live at the home and watch over the children, can note and testify to the very marked change in the children's conduct and life. The good seed of the Word springs up and bears blessed fruit to the praise and glory of God. No wonder that persevering effort is made by the Roman Catholic priests to get the children removed from the home, and that parents are threatened as well as urged to take the children away!"

In a letter to us Miss Anstey says:—"We have 107 children in our home. In one station, after a regiment left, it was reported to the General that they had left 400 children behind them—mostly, if not all, to the care of heathen mothers!"

General Fischer writes:—"Miss Anstey is well-known for the good work she did at Kolar. The American Mission have lent her the use of the buildings in their compound. The work is getting beyond Miss Anstey's private resources, and as England is responsible for the existence of these outcasts, I trust you will endeavour to get her all the assistance you can from home, in money, clothes, &c. I am a frequent visitor at the orphanage, and gladly testify that the children are well cared for, trained, and fed and clothed. Miss Anstey has done, and is doing, a noble work for her Master, but unless she is helped at once by Christian friends at home I fear there is no chance of her being able to continue her work."

"BE YE ALSO READY."

Dear Sir,—A letter from Bromley to-day brings me the following incident—sad yet glad, and at the same time so solemn that it seems to me it is worthy of recording. To me personally it has additional interest because the subject of it was the first person to confess Christ in connection with my evangelistic work in Great Britain. The facts are as follows.

At the first service on Sabbath evening, in Bromley, a young man was awakened, and the same night confessed Christ as his Saviour. He went home and told his father, an unconverted man, of his decision, and made a tender appeal to him to come to Christ also. On the Wednesday following the young man fell from his bicycle and was killed. At the funeral the father, remembering the appeal the son had made to him, and convinced by the son's changed life that his conversion was real, accepted Christ for himself. On Sabbath following the father died suddenly of heart disease.

Yours truly, W. H. Clagett.

8, Chapel-road, Blenheim-crescent, Notting Hill, November 29.

P.S.—A singular incident connected with the above is that in the sermon under which the young man was awakened and led to Christ I had told of a young man in Alabama, America, who came one Sabbath night to the meeting and was converted. The next night as he walked down the aisle of the church he dropped dead in his brother's arms. Whether this incident played any part in his awakening I know not.—W. H. C.

IRISH NOTES.

The income of the Methodist Orphan Society, which has now 169 children under its care, was £1096 for the past year.

Rev. Thomas Connellan and his brother are carrying on a very successful mission in Westmoreland-street Lecture Hall, Dublin.

The moderator of the general assembly, Rev. R. McC. Edgar, has been seriously ill, but is now better and able once more to engage in his work.

Rev. R. C. Hallowes's patience and perseverance has at length triumphed in Arklow. He is now allowed to hold his open-air services without annoyance or molestation.

The members of the Dublin Visiting Mission have during the past year visited many towns and fairs in the South-west of Ireland and sold upwards of 8000 New Testaments and other portions of Scripture.

A meeting of ministers and temperance workers was held on Tuesday evening in the office of the Irish Temperance League, Belfast, to bid good-bye to Mr. Matt Burnett at the close of a six weeks' Gospel Temperance Mission in the city, during which upwards of 4000 persons signed the pledge. Addresses were delivered by Revs. W. J. McCaughan, R. Cole, and others.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A conference of Band of Hope Workers was held in Edinburgh last week.

A new mission hall has been opened in one of the poor districts of Inverness.

Of the cases taken in hand during the past year by the Dundee Prison Aid Society, 75 per cent. are doing well.

Last week a number of congratulatory addresses were presented to Professor W. G. Blaikie at a public meeting to celebrate his jubilee.

The Saltcoats Mission Home is a seaside health resort for Glasgow sick poor. During its twenty-seven years' useful existence more than 26,000 persons have been received.

A newspaper discussion between Mr. Holder, Romish priest, Dundee, and Mr. Joseph Connellan, on priestly boycotting of the Scriptures in Ireland, is going on in The Dundee Advertiser.

MR. WOODWARD FINLEY has been seeing rough service in the Province of Sergipe, North Brazil, where he has been since April, without a missionary companion and much shut up to the Portuguese tongue. At Larangeiras, an official sent 200 men to break up Mr. Finley's preaching service, twice led 500, and once, 1000 in attacking his house, and on September 8, threatened another attack for the next day, in which Mr. Finley should either be killed or expelled from the country. The missionary had frustrated former attempts, and appealed to the Governor, who promptly furnished him with soldiers so that he fully maintained his ground. Amid all this trouble six or seven persons were wishing to confess their faith in Christ.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The report of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. shows a membership of 8547.

New rooms have been opened by the Stratford-on-Avon Association.

Three members of the Adelaide Y.M.C.A. have offered for mission work in China.

In Ceylon Y.M.C.A. work progresses, there being now 21 branches with 631 members.

The Brisbane Association reports rapid progress, and much real work during the past year.

At Lausanne, Switzerland, the foundation-stone of a new Y.M.C.A. building was recently laid.

The membership of the P.S.A. class in connection with the Birmingham Y.M.C.A. now exceeds 1000.

The Liverpool Central Y.M.C.A. holds a religious meeting every Saturday evening, attended by about 1000 young men.

Several members of the Y.M.C.A.'s of Hamburg offered voluntary aid in the hospitals during the late epidemic of cholera.

Mr, Herbert J. Fairfax, late secretary of the Brisbane Association, has accepted a similar position in the Hobart, Tasmania.

Mr. Henry Varley, on the eve of starting for India, gave an address on the Melbourne Cup to 700 men in the Y.M.C.A. room.

The rooms of the Chesham Y.M.C.A. were opened on the 8th inst. Thirty-six members have joined, and active work is in contemplation.

Mr. W. A. Southwell, late of the Melbourne Association, has been preaching and giving Bible readings in South Australia with much acceptance.

Associations are in course of formation at Forrest Hall (near Newcastle), Mount Pleasant (Durham), Willington (Durham), and Dudley (Staffs).

The new general secretary at Dublin, Mr. W. A. Boyd, is much cheered in his work, and has a fine band of consecrated young men around him.

Mr. R. M. G. McDowall, ex-General Secretary of the Christchurch (N.Z.) Y.M.C.A, has been appointed a Presbyterian missionary in the New Hebrides.

The St. Austell Y.M.C.A. has purchased the Ring of Bells public-house, and steps are to be taken immediately to convert it into an Association building.

We hear that the evangelistic meeting in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, is crowded to excess, and every night there are manifest tokens of blessing.

The annual report of the Swansea Association shows good work done. One member is now on his way to join the Congo-Balolo Mission in Central Africa.

Says The Young Men's Magazine :—"The Honolulu Association has got a paper of its own—and a very good one it is—well printed, excellently arranged, and full of live news."

Archdeacon Langley, who takes a deep interest in Y.M.C.A. work in New South Wales, has lately been giving special and very valuable addresses to the members of the Sydney Association.

The Association opened at Mayfield, Sussex, on September 7, reports progress. The workers hope to have a hall erected in a few weeks, ground for the purpose having been lent by the Gas Company.

The annual meeting of the Hereford Association was largely attended and very enthusiastic. A week's special mission for men, conducted by Mr. F. C. Bennett, the travelling sec., has resulted in the decision of several young men for Christ.

A national conference of Swedish Y.M.C.A.'s was lately held at Oerebro, when a large number of delegates attended. The best spirit reigned at the conference, and Prince Oscar Bernadotte was elected president of the national committee.

A successful delegates' meeting was held at Morpeth on Wednesday evening last week, Mr. W. S. Wilkinson presiding. Addresses were given by representatives from Newcastle, Sunderland, South Shields, and Forrest Hall, and the travelling secretary, Mr. John C. Moor.

The Jerusalem Y.M.C.A., which the missionary secretary for Egypt is visiting this month, shows signs of much activity and blessing. The secretary, Mr. Frank T. Ellis, of Mount Zion, is exerting himself for the formation and resuscitation of associations in several other centres of the Holy Land—Jaffa, Nazareth, etc.

At the annual reception of the Dundee Association, held a few nights ago, Rev. George Jackson spoke vigorously on the non-churchgoing habits of the young men of the day. He felt that men must be gone after and sought for in the Spirit of Christ. Let us show how brave and true, strong and tender the Master was, and men would be attracted to follow Him.

The Minister of War in Holland has issued a circular enjoining the officers of the army to favour the entrance of young soldiers into the Y.M.C.A.'s of the country, be they Protestant or Catholic. The rules of the various Y.M.C.A.'s are to be put up in the barracks. The minister hopes that by this means the moral condition of the troops may be improved.

The committee of the Birmingham Association arranged for ninety special sermons to young men to be preached at the churches and chapels in the town and district, in connection with the week of prayer. The direct outside work for young men lately undertaken by this Association in arranging a "P.S.A." at the Midland Institute is continuing to receive warm approval.

A successful endeavour, says Association News, is being made by the North Liverpool Association to get into touch with the lads of the district. A weekly gathering is held every Wednesday evening at six o'clock, to which the title is given of "Our Boys' Own." The aim is to encourage the lads to take an interest in all that is pure and noble, and to entertain them in a bright and instructive style. A powerful limelight lantern is used to illustrate biographies, travels, etc. Vocal and instrumental music is given.

ANNUAL ADDRESS TO THE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. George Williams has penned, as in past years, a New Year's address to workers and members of the Y.M.C.A. Having called earnest attention to personal spirituality of life as the secret of power and fruitfulness, he proceeds:—"The need and importance of our work increase, and I greatly rejoice to know that it continues to grow in every direction. Almost without exception the reports which I am constantly receiving from the various Associations throughout the world speak of progress and prosperity. This is cheering, and should inspire our energies, and stimulate us to renewed efforts in the work which still remains.

"For how vast is the land yet to be possessed! As Associations, let us not limit our possibilities, but rather rise to our opportunities. We have in our Y.M.C.A.'s a large and increasing army of consecrated men. We have splendid machinery for more effective service. Our organisations for the most part are strong and healthy, and the all-necessary spiritual power—without which all human efforts are fruitless—is available. The power of the Holy Ghost is not exhausted. The Pentecostal fire is not extinguished. Oh, that God may be pleased to repeat in all our Associations the Apostolic experiences, and by the mighty, quickening power of his Holy Spirit make our Associations, in the future, instruments of usefulness far transcending the most blessed achievements of the past."

The motto text for the year is :—

"Only be Thou Strong and Very Courageous."

This Mr. Williams briefly expounds from a practical point of view, adding :—

"As Associations the Bible has ever been our chart. The Y.M.C.A. was born in the atmosphere of prayer and Bible study. Herein is the secret of the development and permanent spiritual growth which God has graciously vouchsafed.

"Shall we not, as Associations, renew our allegiance to God's word, and in all departments of our work follow its directions, that we may claim the fulfilment of its 'exceeding great and precious promises'?

"The call for young men of 'strength' and 'courage' was never louder or more distinct than it is to day. The 'signs of the times' clearly indicate that a new age is fast approaching; I therefore summon you young men, in the name of Christ, by his strength and grace to prepare yourselves for it, to realise your responsibilities, and to fulfil your God-given Mission. You are in possession of a glorious heritage. The door of opportunity is thrown widely open. The highway of usefulness is prepared for you to the uttermost parts of the earth. Respond, I pray you, to the pressing demand of the age."

'KWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

The treasurer of the Birmingham branch has recently received a letter from Mrs. Aitchison, giving a sad account of the famine around them. In many families the children were so weak that they were unable to walk to school, and cases were known where they had been glad to cook rats and mice. To further add to their distress, many had lost their cattle through the bitter cold spring. Several vessels had landed large cargoes of maize from America, but the natives having lost their stock, and prices being high, had not the means to buy.

Mr. Aitchison has induced those around him to cultivate roots and vegetables and breeding of poultry, so that in times like the present they will be better able to withstand such hardships.

The prayers and sympathy of friends are earnestly asked. Any help may be sent through the Y.M.C.A., Birmingham.

NEW YEAR APPEALS.

Iron Mission Room, Shoreditch.—J. Knowles, 21, Benthal-road, Stoke Newington, N., asks help towards giving Christmas and other dinners.

The Albany Institute pleads for the general work, for £20 to clear the year, and for special seasonable efforts.—W. G. Ramsay, 157, Camberwell-road, S.E.

Gibraltar-walk Mission.—For special seasonable gifts and treats for the distressed poor and for the children.—Address A. H. Tyler, 8, Penn-street, Hyde-road, Hoxton, N.

Shap-street Mission, Kingsland-road.—The secretary asks help on behalf of the work among the poor children. The treasurer is Mr. Thomas Hunt, 7, King Henry's-walk, Balls Pond-road, N.

Christian Blind Relief Society.—Help is asked for this society, and especially in order to provide seasonable gifts for the blind poor.—Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, St. Stephen's, North Bow, E.

Homes for Working Girls.—Over 2000 young women have enjoyed the benefits of these London Homes during the past year.—Mr. John Shrimpton, Westminster-chambers, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

The Spitalfields Lodging House Band wish to feed 200 destitute children out of the lodging-houses. Hospital and surgical-aid letters will also be gladly accepted.—A. T. A. Millership, 50, Lenthall-road, Dalston, N.E.

The Grove Mission, Southwark, finds among the waterside and similar casual labourers great distress. Help is asked for the "Basket and Bible" and "Feeding the Hungry" funds.—John W. Weston, 31, Park-street, Southwark, S.E.

Frederica Mission, Cardiff.—Working in the worst part of Cardiff, among the poorest and most distressed, the missionary feels greatly the need of help for the children and aged poor.—Address Mary Mason, 32, Loudown-square, Cardiff.

The General Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution relieves aged and infirm servants by pensions and temporary relief. Since the formation of the institution 302 pensioners have been elected. —William Sly, 32, Sackville-street, S.W.

Sheffield.—The Rescue and Evangelisation Society find all around a large amount of misery and want, some of the cases being most deplorable. The workers feel compelled to make a strong appeal for help.—William Corbridge, 250, Duke-street, Sheffield.

Hackney Juvenile Mission.—In view of winter snows and frosts, left-off clothing, boots, Christmas and other cards, pictures, or toys are needed at once. Also help for the Christmas and New Year's dinner, etc., to poor boys and girls at Lyme Grove Hall.—A. A. Knight, Knightsville, Brockley, S.E.

Rescue Homes.—May I plead for two small homes through which many have been rescued? It is very expensive to provide clothes for service, etc. Gifts of money, clothes, old or new, pieces of stuff, interesting books, etc., would be of use.—Hon. Louisa Kinnaird, 48, Lisle-street, Wardour-street, W.

Home Teaching Society for the Blind.—The secretary writes:—We have sixteen blind teachers and guides itinerating daily, and carrying books from house to house in all parts of London. We have also borne the initiatory expenses of starting some sixty country branches since 1855. We need £200 for a clear start for 1893, and on behalf of the sorrowing blind we ask help.—Ralph Tait, 31, New Bridge Street, E.C.

Orphan Working School.—"The receipts of 1892 will largely exceed those of the previous year, still the necessary expenditure has far more than exceeded the increased income, and we are, at the present time, in urgent need of at least £5000. Our board feel that while 123 fatherless children are on the list of candidates, earnestly appealing to them for admission, they cannot reduce the number to be elected." —Algernon C. P. Coote, 73, Cheapside, E.C.

The Belfast Home for Blind was started in February, 1891, and in February, 1892, the property where the home stands was purchased for £1500. A friend promised that if that money was paid before February, 1893, he would give £500. We have received £670, leaving £830 to be still raised. Only five weeks remain, but we feel that the Lord, who has never allowed us to be in debt, will not forsake us now.—Carrie Pim, 1, West Elmwood, Belfast.

Rev. J. Rolfe Fisher writes that the poverty becomes increasingly great. As the manager of several large Board schools, he wants to continue the dinners to about 200 children daily who have mostly gone breakfastless to school. Twelve hot, nourishing dinners of soup and whole-meal bread, with a second course of pudding, bread and jam or syrup, are provided for one shilling—240 for £1. He also supplies from the kitchen a similar meal for a halfpenny to men and women out of work, and sends hot food gratis to the sick poor in their own homes.—Address, 26, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

MORLEY ROOMS, BEDFORD ROW.

The conditions of a barmaid's life in London are favourable neither to physical nor moral well-being. The period of toil is very long, in many cases averaging fifteen to eighteen hours a day, with half that time on Sundays. This constant strain inevitably results in bodily weakness and in ailments of a serious kind. As to the moral aspect of the question little need be said, as it is well understood that the social atmosphere of our drinking saloons is of the unhealthiest description. Even with the best possible endeavours, it must always be difficult for young women in such circumstances to remain uncontaminated.

It would be a happy thing for future generations if female labour were entirely prohibited in places where strong drink is sold. But failing that, there are strong reasons for bringing every good influence to bear on these young women. The Barmaids' and Restaurant branch of the Y.W.C.A., under Miss C. M. Gough (with Miss Morley as honorary superintendent), has done much in this direction. The rooms at 14, John-street, Bedford-row, are a centre of blessed work. We hope that friends in dispensing their Christmas and New Year benefactions will not overlook this quiet but very effective agency on behalf of our much tempted and tried sisters at the bar.

THE GOSPEL OF SONG IN SPAIN.

At present the Gospel in song is taking hold of hearts. What holy angels spake, unholy guilty sinners of every grade and shade, out of every nation and tongue, in time and through eternity do and will sing. It would have done your heart good to see the effect the singing of some of our hymns had the other night upon men, women, and children in our newly-acquired "local." But the climax was reached when the newly-gathered children of the day and night school responded in appropriate verse to the childish but wicked composition of the members of the "Sacred Heart" in their usual endeavour to excite the people against the "Protestantes." During the singing I noticed tears starting from some of the mothers' eyes. Our hymns are now to be heard in houses, factories, and streets. To-day we expect the visit of the officers of justice to embargo our goods for costs—250 francs—for destruction of the idol in Criptana. This does not include the costs of first appeal and fine, which, if not paid, will result in imprisonment. Our enemies in this place are hoping the work will come to nought.

My father has over one hundred men, women, and children under instruction in the day and night school. Our public Gospel services are largely attended, and a spirit of inquiry and desire to know the truth is spreading all around, both among men and women. E. Lawrence.

BRITISH SUNDAYS IN ITALY.

The Missions to Seamen Institute at Savona, in Italy, has issued its annual report, in which it states that what militates most against a good attendance of British sailors at the services is the Sunday working on board the ships. "We know instances where the shipmasters have been God-fearing men, who would have been glad to give their crew a day of rest, and who had a craving to come to the morning service themselves, but they have been forced to work their ships and have stayed away from the service, because, said they, they could not come up and worship with an honest heart, knowing that their men were hard at work and deprived of such a privilege.

"The practice is on the increase, and Savona is gaining an unenviable notoriety in this respect. There may sometimes be seen Italian, Danish, Swedish, or Spanish ships peacefully moored on a Sunday morning, the crews enjoying their Day of Rest, whilst on board the British ships there is noise and shouting, the creaking and beating of steam winches, and the men hard at work. Look at it from whatever point of view you like, it is a disgrace, and a great one, that the very British who at home profess to look upon the Continental way of spending the Sunday with great disapproval, should set such an example in the Continental ports.

"What makes matters worse is that we are assured that these very owners, who give their shipmasters pretty clearly to understand that they must work their ships in port on Sundays, are in many cases men of reputed piety, who would almost certainly repudiate any such intention when the facts were clearly brought home to them."

THE NATIVE RACES AND DRINK.

The united committee for the prevention of the demoralisation of native races by the liquor traffic have now been carrying on their operations for five years. Amongst their number are to be found specially delegated representatives of twenty-one societies of a missionary, philanthropic, and temperance character. If all the various bodies thus represented contributed to the funds, and thus testified their interest in the work pecuniarily as well as by representation, the committee would not be in financial difficulty. Only six societies afford financial support, and the sums received from the twenty-one societies represented only amount in all to £26 6s. With the most rigid economy such a world-wide work cannot be carried out for less than £500 per annum. At the present moment individual members of the committee have had to become personally responsible to their bankers in order to secure an advance which would enable them to pay their assistant secretary the arrears of his almost nominal salary. Unless a considerable sum is forthcoming immediately the committee will have a serious deficiency in their accounts, and they therefore make an earnest appeal to the supporters of the various Missionary and Temperance organisations to do as individuals what, in most cases, these societies feel themselves precluded from doing, and to forward contributions to the Hon. Sec. (Rev. J. Grant Mills), 139, Palace Chambers, Bridge-street, Westminster.

Unless this is done the committee will be unable to continue their work. This would be much worse than a national disaster, for it would affect nations and races all over the world. It must not be supposed that the ratification of the Brussels Treaty has rendered the committee's efforts needless. Even where that Treaty applies, constant vigilance is necessary to prevent or to rectify the violation of its provisions, and there are many parts of the world, to which the treaty has no application, which call for, and are eliciting, the most strenuous efforts on the part of the committee.

Down Lodge Hall, High-street, Wandsworth.—Meetings daily (except Saturday), at 4 p.m.

Letters to the Editor.

SPIRITUAL POWER.

Dear Sir,—This subject is one of infinite importance to the Church and the individual believer. If there is one thing more than another required in the Church or with the follower of Christ to-day, it is spiritual power. Where this power is it acts as a mighty magnet, drawing, moving, impelling men. Ungodly men, while they refuse, in too many cases, to be drawn by this power, yet are moved to confess that there is a power in many Christians not to be found in the worldly-minded man, although so far he may be morally good.

How to receive and how to retain this power, are questions many are asking to-day. It is one of the hopeful signs of the times that so many are earnestly seeking light on these points.

How may I receive this power from on high? the inquirer asks. But some who thus inquire forget to ask first of all, What are the conditions God requires of me before He can bless, and make me a living flame for Him? In 2 Chron. vii. 14 we find God's conditions: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and forgive their sin, and will heal their land." If we have named the name of Christ, and desire to be flames of fire for Him, we must note carefully the four conditions mentioned in the verse as conditions required by God before He can bless.

The first is Humility. We must have the meek and lowly spirit; for "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." We cannot lie too low before God. Why are we lean and parched and without power? Is it not because we refuse to stoop to conquer? We must stoop to the living spring and drink, if we long to have the living water in us a well springing up, and flowing out, to refresh others. The vessel must be emptied ere it can be filled.

The second condition is believing prayer. Taking God at his word, and believing that He really means what He says. We fear that men often pray to be delivered from the dominion of sin, and to be "filled with the Spirit," when in reality they do not mean what they say. They are not praying in the Bible sense. The measure of our faith is the measure of our spiritual life and power. We are to "expect great things from God," and then "attempt great things for God."

The third condition is the seeking heart. "And seek my face." That is, "Look to Me," "seek my face only." God's call to me is "Seek ye my face," and my heart responds, "Thy face, Lord, will I seek." The response must come from the heart.

The fourth condition follows—viz., whole-hearted surrender. "And turn from their wicked ways." That is, turn, and return to God. If we let Christ have the mastery over us, we will have the mastery over self; we will conquer and overcome. We must see that the cords are all cut, that Christ is our king, and that our wills are swallowed up in his. Let man's part be attended to, and God's part will not be wanting. In other words, fulfil the conditions, and the promise is sure. "Then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sins, and will heal their land."

But the query comes, how may we retain this power? First of all, have we opened the avenues and chambers of the soul for the Spirit to enter, to take possession, and to remain? If any cellar or corner in the heart is preoccupied, how can the Spirit enter and reign there? He cannot. We shut Him out. He is waiting to enter if we are prepared to receive Him.

As Principal H. C. G. Moule says in his "Veni Creator:" "Our part is to open in humblest faith all the avenues and regions of the soul and life, that we may be filled with what we already have." This is true, but we must not despise the true waiting spirit. At the same time, we must see to it that our waiting is not another name for idleness. I have never seen anything better on the "waiting spirit," than Rev. Wm. Arthur's wise and weighty words in his flaming book, "The Tongue of Fire." The cheap edition at 1s. 6d. brings it within the reach of all. The anxious inquirer after power for service should also procure Rev. Andrew Murray's "With Christ in the School of Prayer." It is one of the finest books on the subject of prayer ever written. There is, I may mention, another book among the many, which, to my mind, is the best book on the spiritual life that has been published in recent years. I mean "Studies in the Spiritual Life," by Rev. John Baird, Edinburgh. It is a mine of spiritual wealth.

If we would retain and increase the spiritual life, we must covet earnestly the single eye. As Rev. F. B. Meyer says in one of his admirable little books: "God will not give a man water merely to turn his own mill wheel."

Furthermore, we must use what we have received. The law of Christ's kingdom is Use or Lose.

"An Anxious One," in your issue of Dec. 8, wished to know, "If one can have this spiritual power working in him in the ordinary routine of workshop life, etc., or is it only for ministers, missionaries, and such like, who are wholly engaged in Christian work?" I know what all this means. I have passed through the same experience. When in business in the busy city of Glasgow, many a time I found it hard to keep in touch with Christ. But it is possible even in the busy workshop, or in the whirl of business, to live the crucifixion, resurrection life.

I may say in passing that "An Anxious One" errs if he thinks that ministers, because of their position, are above the reach of temptation. Their temptations may not be exactly the same as those which many have to grapple with in workshops, places of business, &c., yet ministers stand out more exposed to the fierce and subtle assaults of hell. If the devil can manage in any way to bring down one of the Lord's standard-bearers, causing confusion in Jehovah's camp, he knows his opportunity has come, and the forces of hell are mustered to take advantage of it. We have all our own particular temptations to meet and overcome, for "we have turned every one to his own way."

Let "An Anxious One" get surcharged with Divine electricity, and fully realise his position in the workshop or elsewhere, as a representative of Christ, and the holy spark within will burn steadily day by day, notwithstanding the uncongenial environments, only he will need to feed the fire, not in fits and starts, but moment by moment. Is. xxvii. 3.

The Psalmist says (xvi. 8), "I have set the Lord always before me; because He is at my right hand, and shall not be moved." If we are "to be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," we too must set the Lord always before us, at one time as well as another. That is equally, "in every place, in every condition, in every company, in every employment, and in every enjoyment." The devil and his agents are no doubt mighty, but our Lord is almighty. We conquer in Him, as we live to Him, and for Him, and with Him. Have faith in God and do the right. Let patience have her perfect work. God's delays are not God's denials. The spiritual life is a growth—growth by development. First the blade, then the ear; after that the full corn in the ear. "The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

Many are seeking after signs rather than Christ. Seek Christ, his face, to know Him, to do his will. Only obey the Heavenly Vision, or the Saviour's voice, and He will lead step by step into greater liberty, light, joy, and power. Take time to be holy. Wait before God in private, and you will be changed into the same image from glory to glory, and thus your spiritual power will daily increase.—Yours in the Master's service,

T. Moore Smith.

CONVENT SCHOOLS AND CONVENTS.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed space in your valuable paper to say a word of warning to the women of England against the many convents which are springing up in our land? I believe that those Protestant parents who send their girls to convent schools make a great mistake.

If a mother place her child on the edge of a precipice, she has but herself to blame should that child fall over.

I have often heard the remark, "Oh, but the nuns teach such lovely work in their schools."

True, they do, but, happily, lovely work is not confined to convent schools; and were it so, shall we risk the taking in of false teaching for the sake of a stitch in embroidery?

Last year terrible discoveries were made in a Naples convent, which went by the significant name of the "Convent of the Buried Alive Nuns." A young girl in that city had formed an attachment, contrary to the will of her parents, and, refusing to break off the engagement, she was forcibly placed by them in the "Convent of the Buried Alive."

These good parents, however, seem to have had a vague idea of what is involved in being "buried alive," for they expected both to be able to see their daughter and to hear from her. This they soon found was impossible, and failing to prevail with the heads of the convent, they appealed to the municipal authorities. The officers of the law forced an entrance, and in this holy retreat the poor victims of superstition were found in an indescribable state of neglect and misery. Half-naked and half-starved, many of them had become imbecile through cruel treatment.

I have just found that a convent of this description stands nearly opposite my own residence in Rome. No name, no inscription, proclaims its dark uses, but on my inquiring what building it was, I received the answer:—It is occupied by those nuns who never, never, never go out! And one can now understand why its windows are of the smallest, and, besides, are half-shuttered and covered with iron bars!

What is going on inside? Let us ask escaped nuns! The poor victims now in may only be released by death.

And yet, in spite of the black revelations which again and again come to us from these closed houses, there are still convents in free England which may not be visited!

Oh! sign the petitions now being got up for Parliament, that the convents of England be open to visitation. We have signed them in Rome, on your behalf. Shall young girls be shut up behind iron bars against their will for life, and that in a Protestant country? God forbid!

Yours sincerely,

Rome, December 1. Margaretta Thomas.

HOW TO STOP VIVISECTION.

Much has been written against Vivisection, but the time has now arrived for vigorous and concerted action to stop the iniquity. Let all who know the cruelty and wickedness of the practice unite in a crusade such as our fathers carried on against the slave trade, and such as in recent years was waged against the legalised iniquity represented by the C.D. Acts. With God's blessing the same results will in a few years be secured. Vivisection, like legalised slavery and prostitution, shall be overthrown and swept away for ever from our country.

"But," someone may reply, "it is supported and practised by doctors and learned scientists. It is taught by the faculty and is sanctioned by Acts of Parliament." I admit all that; but let us be strong and of a good courage. There are two powers more than equal to these opposing forces—truth and righteousness: let us rely on them.

I venture to make a few suggestions as to the practical means to be employed:—

There must be agitation. People generally must be enlightened and convinced. The whole nation must be aroused to feel that we are guilty of a great wrong while vivisection is legally sanctioned.

Let there be lectures with illustrations. Let a living dog be shown. Then exhibit the apparatus used and explain, in temperate language, a few of the tortures called "experiments in scientific research." Coloured pictures would help. At the close get signatures for petitions.

Placards with descriptions of two or three experiments and pictorial illustrations might be posted about. (This was done a few years ago.)

Short articles and letters in every newspaper and magazine possible would be valuable in educating the public.

Let there be deputations to every M.P., asking him to support a bill for the total abolition of vivisection, and making all such practices subject to the same punishment as if practised by non-medical men.

Let those who condemn the practice discountenance it by not employing any medical man who supports it and by not contributing to any hospital where it is taught or practised. This may be called "boycotting," but if we patronise and support vivisection do we not thereby countenance the evil and become partakers of the sin?

"All this will involve labour and money." Quite true. So does every reform, but vivisection is a great evil and must be abolished. "Open thy mouth for the dumb." H.

THE LATE REV. C. GRAHAM.

Dear Sir,—Having known and esteemed the late Rev. Charles Graham, I read with interest the sketch given in the last Christian, and desire to say that while the greater part is correct and richly deserved, the record contains a few inaccuracies. No person bearing the title of "Lord Mountjoy" was connected with "the rebellion of 1798." Mr. Graham's father was highly estimable, but not "an officer in the Army."

His mother's worth was incalculable, and her influence, together with the instrumentality of Methodism, led to his conversion and that of his brother John. After these two brothers had given proof of their fitness for the work they were both received into the ministry of the Primitive Wesleyan Connexion, not "to the vexation of their parents and friends," but (as we understood) with their cordial approval. After several years of circuit work they resigned their offices, and the subject of your sketch took the course which you describe, but his brother, after ministering in Craven Chapel, London, and afterwards in Sydney, was drowned while on a visit to his relatives in America. They were men of God, rich in mental power and faithful in the service of their Master.

Faithfully yours,

James Wilson, Methodist Minister.

Grosvenor-square, Dublin, December 24.

Obituary.

REV. WILLIAM LAW.

LAST week we announced the illness of Rev. William Law, who has since passed away, deeply regretted by all who knew him. Mr. Law, who succeeded Canon Quirk in the vicarage of Rotherham, was for some time curate of Beverley, and of Doncaster, with Mr. Carr-Glyn. He came with him to Kensington, and in 1883 inaugurated the Harrow Mission. His appointment to Rotherham was due to the sound judgment of the late Archbishop Thomson. Mr. Law succeeded to a well-organised parish, every work in which flourished under his personal care. He had the spirit of a true evangelist, and won the hearts of the people.

MR. JOHN F. SHAW.

We hear with regret of the death of John Farquhar Shaw, the founder and head of the firm of John F. Shaw and Co. His life was one of much Christian and general activity, diminished only by the weakness of advancing age; and he was able, until about two years ago, to display an energetic interest in all his business and other concerns. In his Christian work he was connected for many years with Rev. J. Harington Evans, while ministering at John Street Chapel, Bedford Row, and was afterwards prominently identified with the late Bishop Villiers, when at St. George's, Bloomsbury. He was on the Committee of the London City Mission in its early years, with Mr. James Nasmyth and Rev. John Robinson, and worked likewise in a similar capacity for the National Refuges. As a publisher he has rendered permanent and widespread service in the issuing of many works by Dr. Cumming, Dr. Winslow, Dr. Saphir, and Rev. W. Pennefather.

ARCHDEACON HESSEY.

The death is announced of Dr. James Augustus Hessey, Archdeacon of Middlesex, in the 79th year of his age. Born in London in 1814, he was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and at St. John's College, Oxford. In 1842 he was appointed Public Examiner at Oxford; and in 1845 to the headmastership of Merchant Taylors' School. This post he filled for a quarter of a century, being also Preacher of Gray's Inn from 1850 till 1879. He was Grinfield Lecturer on the Septuagint 1865-7, and again 1867-9; Select Preacher to the University of Oxford in 1850, Bampton Lecturer in 1860, Boyle Lecturer at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, 1871-3, and Select Preacher at Cambridge 1878-9. Dr. Hessey's list of publications was extensive, including "Schemata Rhetorica," "Biographies of the Kings of Judah," "The Restoration of the Holy Places," "Sunday: its Origin, History, and Present Obligation considered," and a large number of sermons preached on various occasions.

MRS. THOMAS, ROME.

On the evening of Monday, December 19, the Evangelical work in Rome sustained a distinct loss in the death of Mrs. Thomas, the wife of Rev. John Thomas, who represents the British and Foreign Bible Society in the city. An operation, rendered necessary by severe illness, was effected by most skilful hands, but availed not to ward off the end. Mrs. Thomas faced it all with a calm courage, impressing the medical men around her with the spirit which she manifested. The funeral service took place on Wednesday, the 21st, at the Protestant Cemetery, and was conducted by Rev. Dr. Gray. Rev. L. Conti testified to the active Christian life which Mrs. Thomas had led, and Rev. Dr. Prochet offered prayer at the grave.

Quiet and reserved as she was, Mrs. Thomas found vent for her activity in various ways. Besides aiding her husband effectively and continuously in his work in the Bible depôt, she bore her part in the mission started by Mr. Thomas some time ago, near the Porta Pia. Once a week she gave her services in connection with one of the medical missions under the care of Rev. Jas. Wall. Her kindly and large-hearted interest in all the work going on made her many friends.

REV. WILLIAM HOLESGROVE.

The beloved and faithful vicar of Henlow (Beds), who passed lately to his rest, was a bright example of what an Evangelical clergyman may become in a country parish, and his death was the subject of genuine grief throughout the village. Mr. Holesgrove was appointed to the vicarage of Henlow in 1875, having previously been successively curate of St. George's, Gloucester; Felixstowe; and chaplain of Seckford Hospital, Woodbridge. The funeral of Mr. Holesgrove was very largely attended, the church being crowded. There were many clergymen and Nonconformist ministers present. Rev. A. Webb, in the course of the funeral sermon, spoke as follows of the late vicar:—"(1) He had an intense love of the Gospel. He was not moved by the criticisms or shifting sands of the present day. He loved the Gospel of Jesus. Christ and his salvation was very real to him. (2) He carried out in his daily life that which he taught in the pulpit. It has been well said of him that his daily life was a sermon. It is now nearly three years since I first knew him, and I could not but feel then, as I have proved since, that he was a true child of God. (3) He was a true pastor. (4) He loved the Church of England with true devotion."

Evangelistic Notes.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's labours in Dayton, Ohio, are being greatly blessed. Large numbers have professed faith in Christ.

Rev. John Burnham has held an interesting special mission in Southwell. Some encouraging indications have appeared of fruit.

Rev. C. H. Yatman, American evangelist, is having a season of great religious interest in New York, at Union-square Theatre, and other places.

Mr. T. W. Canning, of the London Evangelisation Society, has completed a fortnight's mission at Nairn in connection with the United Presbyterian Church. The attendance at the meetings has been good all through. The Lord's blessing rested upon the work. Christians have had a time of quickening and refreshing, and not a few, it is believed, have found rest and peace by believing in Jesus.

JAMES MACMILLAN, Minister.

Mr. Charles Minor has been holding evangelistic services at the Royal Assembly Rooms, Reading, since Nov. 6, and will bring the series to a close on Sunday next. Mr. Minor's earnest and happy manner has drawn large audiences of those who habitually neglect the means of grace. There has been a continued and increasing power in the meetings, and many have yielded themselves to God. During the week nights Mr. Minor has been engaged in Gospel and temperance work, both in Reading and Tilehurst, with good results. At the latter place Major Liebenrood took part in the meetings.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond, who has lately been labouring at Cambridgeport and Somerville, U.S., has been greatly pleased with the evangelistic work being carried on at Cambridgeport by Mr. J. S. Paine. He adds:—"Mr. Paine always has two or three inquiry meetings at the close of his service. Whenever any are serious, they know that some one is ready to take them by the hand and lead them to Jesus; and thus, by mingled prayer and wisely directed effort, the work of conversion goes on year after year. Too many are satisfied with having crowds in their Sunday-schools and a kind of enthusiasm manifested in singing and in the general service. They seem satisfied with trying to feed those that are spiritually dead, but this is very unsatisfactory work, especially for those who are longing to see the dead made spiritually alive."

Personalia.

Dr. Herber Evans has, it is announced, resolved to decline, owing to his health, the principalship of the North Wales College.

Prebendary J. Rawson Lumby, Dean of Grandchester, well known for his expository writings, has been appointed successor to the late Dr. Hort as Lady Margaret's Professor of Divinity at Cambridge.

Rev. Thomas Cook, Wesleyan Connexional evangelist, who has recently returned to England after a remarkable mission in South Africa, has decided to ask the Conference of 1893 for a year's leave of absence, so that he may hold a series of missions in the Colonies.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies revisited last week his former charge at New Court, receiving a warm welcome. His sermon on "The Names of Jehovah in the Old Testament" must have stirred in many minds a new sense of the treasures hidden in the Word awaiting the diligent searcher.

Dr. John Gritton, we are authorised to state, has, by letters to the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London, seceded from ministry and membership in the Church of England; and has received believers' baptism, intending to minister, if the Lord wills, as pastor in a congregation maintaining that ordinance.

Mr. J. E. Budgett-Meakin has given up in the meantime his intended tour in America. Since his return to Morocco, he has acquired the proprietorship of The Times of Morocco and The English Press of that place, resuming his editorial duties to relieve his father, whose failing health necessitated his retirement from the editorship.

Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, seems determined to carry on the war for good government in that city, which was begun by Dr. Crosby, as President of the Society for the Prevention of Crime. What he is now doing is to organise, under the name of the City Vigilance League, a thorough investigation into the condition of civic government in New York.

Temperance Notes.

THE Bishop of Carlisle, in the course of a recent address at Penrith, reminded his hearers that there are about 1000 parishes in England where there is not a single public-house.

The Church of England Temperance Society at Bradford has withdrawn from the Temperance Federation of the town, which has hitherto united the temperance workers of all denominations.

The Peckham Rye Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association recently held a successful eight days' mission, resulting in sixty-nine pledges, and the addition of thirty new members to the branch.

Madame Loyson, wife of Père Hyacinthe, now on a visit to the United States, puts as the first step toward the evangelisation of France the prohibition of intoxicating drinks, and says that "in France the wine-cup is the god of the masses."

The shutting of public-houses in England on Sundays has been engaging the attention of the Government. The view of Ministers is that Sunday closing should not be dealt with by a general enactment, but should be left to be settled by the local authorities.

The women's building at the Chicago Exposition, which is expected to form an unequalled attraction, will be fittingly remembered by the erection of a women's memorial building, to be presented to the city of Chicago by the various women's clubs in America.

The remarkable address which Miss Willard gave at the Denver Convention a short time ago will be published in London by the World's W.C.T.U., 47, Victoria-street, Westminster. All who wish to get a comprehensive idea of the progress of thought in reform work should read it.

A recent issue of the Chicago Graphic contained an interesting sketch of Lady Henry Somerset, with portrait of her ladyship. The readers were informed that she will lead the large delegation of "White Ribboners" who will be present at the opening ceremonies of the World's Fair.

Lady Henry Somerset has again been driven to explain through the Press the fact that she inherited several licensed houses as part of her father's property, and that she cannot deal with them until the leases expire. She has already been able to close eight houses, and does not intend to grant a lease to any licensed houses.

A five days' Gospel Temperance Mission has been held in Victoria Chapel, Wandsworth-road, when stirring addresses were given by Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Caine, Miss Coles, Mr. Raper, and other well-known Temperance advocates. Pledges were taken every evening, and by some who had suffered deeply through the awful curse of the drink.

The executives of the Scottish Temperance League, the Scottish Permissive Bill and Temperance Association, and the Independent Order of Good Templars, have agreed to hold a National Temperance Convention in the City Hall, Glasgow, on Tuesday, January 17, to give expression to the views of the Temperance Reformers of Scotland.

Mr. George Blaiklock lately gave an address at Upton Park on the Bishop of Chester's scheme for dealing with the liquor traffic, in the course of which he showed that drunkenness had been increasing of late years in Gothenburg, and adduced evidence to show that the system in vogue there was not the success that its advocates would have us believe.

Canon Wilberforce will preside for Lady Henry Somerset, who speaks in Manchester at the great temperance demonstration on Monday, Jan. 23, in the Free Trade Hall. Sir Wilfrid Lawson will preside for Miss Willard, who speaks there on the 24th. Both ladies are engaged to speak at large meetings, which have been arranged in Edinburgh.

The Norwegian Women's Total Abstinence Union, which has hitherto consisted of five separate branches connected with the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, is now formed into a National Organisation in conjunction with the Young Women's Christian Association, and as a branch of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union. Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg has been elected president of the Central Committee.

There has been quite a temperance revival in New Haven, Conn., under the lead of Thomas Edward Murphy, son of Mr. Francis Murphy. Four audiences, in number over 10,000, were addressed in one day, and in them alone 1000 converts to temperance were secured, a hundred Yale students being among the number. In all over 5000 converts have been made during a stay of three weeks.

The executive committee of the British section of the World's W.C.T.U. are wise in the importance they place in good and popular literature. They have already secured some of the best known writers for the pamphlets they have published, and recently Her Grace the Duchess of Bedford has given them the exclusive right to print all she writes. A Bible reading by the Duchess will shortly be issued at 47, Victoria-street, Westminster.

The Book World.

A LINK WITH THE PAST.

Bible students will thank Mr. J. Rendel Harris for his popular account of the Newly Recovered Gospel of St. Peter. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton). It is true that it has been somewhat hurriedly produced, but his competent knowledge of this line of archæological research lends deserved weight to his views. While rejecting all canonical authority for this latest link between the past and the present in scriptology, Mr. Harris shows how all these modern "finds" are making more and more unassailable the New Testament writings.

The Cambridge University Press has issued The Gospel According to Peter and the Revelation of Peter. (2s. 6d.) Here we have the text of both the newly-recovered Greek fragments, with lectures, historical and explanatory, by J. Armitage Robinson, B.D., and M. Rhodes James, M.A. The little book is an important addition to pseudepigraphical literature. Following so rapidly several valuable discoveries relating to early Christian doctrine and practice, these so-called Petrine documents encourage us to expect others, which, by throwing light upon the past, will enable us more perfectly to realise the faith and life—sadly marred by declension and strife—of the Church of Christ during the early centuries.

THE NEW POPULAR EDUCATOR.

Under the title of The New Popular Educator, Messrs. Cassell & Co. have completed the re-issue of this comprehensive and very valuable work, which has deservedly attained a world-wide reputation. Consisting of eight handsome and substantial volumes, published at 5s. each, this edition is a great improvement upon its predecessors. A large portion of the text has been entirely rewritten, and the whole is printed in clear new type. The illustrations, which are exceedingly good and helpful, are more numerous; while a number of very fine coloured plates and new maps, also in colours, have been introduced. These volumes are a mine of wealth for thoughtful people, young or old. They constitute a standard universal library, comprising education in departments of art, science, poetry, mechanics, and a number of languages thrown in, all brought thoroughly up to date. We strongly advise parents and guardians to bear this work in mind when selecting a present for young men or maidens of a studious turn of mind.

The Methodist Family, Vol. XXIII. (2s. Stock.) Contains good illustrations, a serial story, bright articles, choice extracts, and poetry. It is calculated to excite and maintain the healthy interest of its readers, both old and young.

A neat, convenient, and finely printed pocket edition of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress is issued by Messrs. S. Bagster & Sons. There is a profusion of miniature illustrations. We wish for this pretty edition of the immortal allegory a multitude of readers.

Michael the Tailor (C. H. Kelly) is one of those realistic life sketches that we get now and then from our Methodist friends, whose church system seems to give scope to grace and talent in those of humble status in society. The stimulating story is translated from the French by Mr. Gliddon.

India's Women, the monthly record of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, begins volume xiii. with a somewhat plainer but tasteful exterior. (2d. Nisbet.) Rev. T. A. Gurney, M.A., of Swanage, begins a series of papers on "India's Women," and the general contents are, as ever, deeply interesting.

Cecil Langton; or, the Glow of an Earnest Life. By Mrs. Harvey-Jellie. (1s. G. Stoneman.) A wholesome little story, calculated to convey a good impression. Laura Clayton, a high-minded young woman, was worthy to become the wife of the hero of the book, whose high character was consonant with his earnest devotion to Christ.

A Week Spent in a Glass Pond, by the Great Water Beetle. (1s. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) This is a very amusing nursery book, with large coloured pictures. Little folks will be delighted with the story, written by Juliana Horatia Ewing, which has a wholesome moral, specially addressed to such as find pleasure in collecting objects for an aquarium.

The Jewish Intelligence for 1892 is an attractive volume, setting forth the widespread operations of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. There is a large amount of information in the well-illustrated pages. The opening part of next year's volume has a somewhat brighter exterior, and the title is Jewish Missionary Intelligence. (Nisbet & Co.)

The Short Story of a Long Life. (Alexander & Shepheard.) These memorials of the late Dr. F. Trestrail, edited by his widow, are short and unpretending, but they give a pleasing presentation of his prolonged and active life. Both as a pastor and a missionary secretary Dr. Trestrail served his generation well, and these memorials are fitted, in the words of the compiler, to prove "an example and an inspiration."

For the New Year.—Miss Charlotte Murray has prepared some tasteful booklets for the New Year:—Hands and Heart (1s.) is a pretty Birthday Text-book, with spaces for writing in names; The Little Chorister and Wings Celestial (6d. each) are beautifully illuminated poems for the season; while a ringing Watchword for 1893 is printed on a card (1d.). (Hastings, Henry Randle; London, Partridge & Co.)

The Infallible Book; or, Biblical Inspiration. By William Frith. (2s. 6d. Partridge.) Many who cannot read discussions couched in the language of modern theological controversy, are yet desirous of being confirmed in the faith which naturalist critics have harshly disturbed. For readers usually classed as "general," this is just the thing. It will confirm their confidence in the Word of God, and stimulate them so to study the Sacred Volume that they will become experimentally convinced of its inspiration and authority in Divine things.

Three Health Manuals are published by Mr. T. D. Morison, Glasgow (London, Simpkin). Sleep and Sleeplessness, by Dr. W. A. Hammond (3s. 6d.) is an exhaustive and useful treatise on "the hygiene of the night," containing a great body of information and advice. Good Health and Careful Living, by Dr. W. W. Hall (3s. 6d.), gives in plain and essentially practical terms much invaluable counsel on the prevention and cure of every-day ailments. Our Bodies, by Dr. A. F. Blaisdell (3s. 6d.), is well and comprehensively described in its secondary title, "A popular and hygienic account of the human system and its healthful workings," or how to live and keep well.

The Glory of God in Redemption. By the late Charles Graham (2s. 6d. Shaw & Co.) Starting with the idea that redemption is the fullest manifestation of God, the lamented author of this work, in nineteen luminous chapters, conducts us along the highway of Scripture teaching. The little book is quite a body of sound instruction, the author's aim being, to employ his own words, "to unfold those truths which he has taught and been assured of for many years, which are essentially connected with the highest glory of God, and with our own salvation, holiness, usefulness, and happiness." Warnings are uttered against current errors, and the present aspect of redemption is treated of as well as the historic and prophetic.

Christ's Coming Kingdom; or, The Lord's Reign on Earth. By Henry Varley. Third edition, enlarged. (2s. 6d. and 5s. Holness.) We welcome a new edition of this very useful work on a theme which is daily receiving increased attention. At the end of the volume the chapters, "Is Christ's Coming Imminent?" which appeared in our columns some months ago, are given, following a study of miracle in connection with the Lord's return. Mr. Varley's accustomed boldness of language well suits the grand interest of the subject. All who write on prophecy court criticism, but the broad outlines of this exposition will elicit the hearty approval of prophetic students of all schools. The volume will be specially welcome to such as are beginning the systematic study of the prophetic Scriptures.

Faith-healing, Christian Science, and Kindred Phenomena, by J. M. Buckley, LL.D. (6s. T. Fisher Unwin.) The phenomena discussed in this very readable volume include faith-healing, astrology, divination, dreams, apparitions, witchcraft, and other topics generally classed as mysterious. The author first sifts the facts, and then endeavours to explain their existence. On the subject of faith-healing, he directs attention to failures as well as successes, and attributes to special mental or emotional causes results which are often regarded as miraculous. A man of devout mind, he distinguishes between superstitious fancies and supernatural occurrences. Though by no means satisfied with some of the positions he takes up, we gladly admit his acumen and good sense, and acknowledge the value of his work as a contribution to several much-canvassed departments of psychical research.

The Quiver (Cassell & Co., Ltd.) for January, 1893, contains much that is interesting and fresh. It is a large budget of good matter.

Rev. T. Champness has prepared, and issued from the "Joyful News" Book Depôt, Rochdale, some attractive leaflets, entitled Picture Talks for Boys and Girls. (Packets of 100, assorted, 6d.)

Good Company, the magazine founded by the late J. Jackson Wray, has begun a new series, edited by Marion E. Jackson Wray. The wholesome and attractive contents of the January number include the opening chapter of a biography of the lamented founder of the magazine. (2d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)

Messrs. Spicer Brothers, 19, New Bridge-street, E.C., have issued a handy blotting pad, well framed in leather, with slate tablet attached for memoranda, which can be erased. The blotting paper used is a new production, called "Driquic," and the makers claim for it unusual absorbent powers, and state that it will work as well when covered with ink as when new.

GIPSY GOSPEL WAGON MISSION.

A new effort on behalf of the gipsies of Great Britain has been made, under the direction of several representative Christian workers. It is called the Gipsy Gospel Wagon Mission, and in a descriptive circular we read: "The gipsies live among us as ignorant of God and of his Christ as though they lived in the darkest region of heathenism. As a race they seem everywhere equally neglected, for though ten times as numerous in Hungary and Transylvania, they are there as separate from all others as among ourselves.

"Considerable interest has recently been created, both in Britain and in America, in the state of the gipsies, through the life-story and the signally God-honoured work of the evangelist known as Gipsy Smith. God has surely raised up this remarkable instrument of his grace not merely to gather many into the Kingdom, but also to direct the thought and heart of the Christian Church to the long-neglected thousands of the 'Romany' race scattered over this and other lands. Many have asked themselves, How can we help? A Gipsy Gospel Wagon sent to the great centres of gipsy encampments is manifestly the most suitable means. There to open schools and preach Christ in a manner suited to the circumstances and character of gipsy life and prejudices, is believed by Gipsy Smith, and those of his race who know the love of God in Christ, to be the surest and shortest way to reach the need. One wagon is now being built on the most approved method of construction for similar purposes, but several more will be desirable, as the need is widely spread, and education takes more time than mere itinerating preaching to become effective.

"Gipsy Smith will (D.V.) return from America in the spring, when it is hoped the work contemplated by this movement will be formally entered on. Each wagon will cost about £140, after which the teaching and preaching staff will require support. One lady in Scotland has given £100, so that one wagon is in hand." Communications should be addressed to Mr. B. F. Byrom, Brookland Lodge, Delph, near Oldham.

SYRIA.—The improved sanitation of Syria, due, perhaps wholly, to missions, accounts, as Mr. George Ford says, for the "happy difference" between the cholera visitation of this year and heavier visitations of former seasons.

A NEW INSTITUTE.—On Tuesday week a village club and institute was opened at Rye Park. This has been built and given by a lady as a thank offering, and is called the Ramoth. It is intended to be a place of refuge for the people living on the Rye estate. A place where they can spend their evenings more profitably than in the public-house. It is expected to have Gospel Temperance meetings, and with occasional Bible readings. Prayer is asked that many of the men and boys may soon accept Christ.

PEACE SUNDAY.—Dr. Evans Darby, secretary of the Peace Society, writes that very encouraging replies have been received from the various religious denominations in response to the circulars (twelve thousand in number), issued by that society, inviting them to preach special sermons in favour of Peace on the Sunday before Christmas Day, December 18. At least a thousand new adhesions have been forwarded to the Peace Society, and this year the Bishop of Durham specially invited the clergy of his diocese to observe this occasion.

MR. J. G. WOOLLEY concluded a week's Gospel temperance mission at Swansea on December 11. On the first night more than 1,500 people were present. After this the large hall, seating more than 2,000, was filled, and, as the mission drew to its close, packed with audiences, and more than 800 pledges were taken. At an extra meeting, after an appeal from Mr. Woolley, 350 women of all classes gave in their names to join the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union (the local branch of the B.W.T.A. having agreed to affiliate), and took the white ribbon. The Christian women who have been labouring to spread temperance principles are greatly cheered.

Rescued for Life.

From Dr. Barnardo's Christmas Number of Night and Day the following varied and deeply interesting cases, illustrative of his great work of child rescue daily being carried on, are gathered :—

"Where did these lads come from?" asks Dr. Barnardo in his "Personal Notes." "Ah! my readers may well echo the question as they survey the faces of the three youths who stood a few days back in our Receiving House, having been rescued only a few hours before by one of my earnest colleagues who labours as a fisher of men among the slums of Darkest London.

"Charlie Musgrave, the lad to the left hand, hails from Glasgow. His father was a labourer, often out of work, but still managing to keep a decent roof over his head. Three and a-half years ago, Charlie's mother being dead, his father married again. The second wife did not take kindly to the existing family of three children, and Charlie, chafing at what he considered the unkindness and severity of his stepmother, soon quitted the humble home, and got work for a time in his native city. But a strike occurred, and Charlie, thereby thrown out of employment, took ship at Greenock, and went to sea, returning occasionally to Glasgow. On his last visit he found that his father had died after a lingering illness, and that the two youngest children had been taken to the poor house. Of the stepmother he could find no trace.

"Eventually Charlie was discharged at Cardiff. There he remained a short time without employment, soon exhausting the little money he had saved. Then he had to sell his kit and all his decent clothing to keep himself alive. Unable now to get a ship, he tramped to London, and found himself, after three or four months, in a common lodging-house—a tramp upon the streets, without proper clothing, without food, often without lodging for the night. He occasionally got shelter in a casual ward, but on the whole he preferred to wander about the streets if he had no means to pay for a lodging.

"Joseph Wellup, the dark lad in the centre, is a native of the States, a genuine negro. He came over here as cook's assistant on board a sailing vessel; was discharged in London; obtained for a short time a shelter in the Asiatics' Home, but of course could not be kept there, and then, like his companions, drifted into the common lodging-house and into the streets, where he had striven to keep body and soul together by odd jobs which did not always come.

"Jimmie Smith, the smaller boy to the right, is a genuine Cockney, born in Bermondsey. Jimmie does not remember his father. His mother had been all her life either an occupant of a common lodging-house or a tramp about the country, Jimmie accompanying her in her wanderings until he was old enough, as he said, to start life himself as an independent beggar and a doer of odd jobs on his own account. His success as a jobber may be gauged from the picture, where his attire on the day he was admitted is faithfully represented. Jimmie had managed to evade the School Board. He does not know his letters; he knows very little indeed of anything that is worth knowing. On all spiritual and moral subjects his mind is as dark as that of a heathen. And yet Jimmie has sharp wits. Keenly alive as he is on all matters that relate to his own interests, he would be a clever man who succeeded in outwitting Jimmie in any transaction of buying and selling.

"These three lads, ill-clad, without food, forlorn, homeless, friendless, with the bitter winter before them, were captured at one cast of my net in the deep Sea of Vagrancy whose waters ceaselessly wash the shores of Slumland.

"'What will you do with them?' perhaps some reader asks. In reply I say, Come to visit me three or four months hence, and I will be able to give you a satisfactory answer, an answer not of mere conjecture, but of proved experience. Unless these lads have in them the elements of criminality, I hope each of them will be found to be then in preparation for a life in which starvation or vagrancy will have no share. Just let my readers bear in mind that, since our Labour House for Destitute Youths was opened, nearly 2500 young fellows, gathered from the streets and common lodging-houses, have been lifted out of the slums for ever, have been given a short testing and training within the walls of this single institution, and then sent out into the great world with such incentives to and opportunities of success as a new environment and habits of labour, of industry, of honesty, and thrift, supplemented by earnest Christian training, can alone afford.

"A quaint little figure was two-year Sally, as she gazed at you with a wondering and somewhat wistful stare from the depths of the grotesque headgear in which she was arrayed when she was placed in my charge. She was forthwith photographed in accordance with my usual rule, and a queer little picture she makes. Both Sally and her brother Jack were clean and neat enough in appearance when first I saw them, for they had come from the kind and loving care of friends who had temporary charge of them, but their surroundings had surely been dark enough.

"The plain, unvarnished narrative in my books is as follows: 'In the room in which these children were found, there was nothing whatever beyond a few old cooking-utensils; and the whole place was in a filthy state. The father died about eighteen months since. The mother, who was left with three children, is a grossly drunken, dirty, and immoral character. Owing to her spending all the money she could get in drink, her rent went unpaid, her furniture was seized, and her room became empty. The boy, when seen by a doctor, was pale, filthy, and suffering from enlarged glands. The baby was dirty, thin, and covered with vermin. Both had been grossly neglected. The mother used to lock them up in the room for hours, and even days, at a time, and at times their cries were so piteous that the people of the house have unlocked the door and given them food, which was ravenously devoured.' Is there not some one among my readers whose heart will go out to baby Sally? To provide for her would be a pleasing Christmas gift to our Lord Christ.

"BROTHER JACK."

"The public would be appalled if by some magic process their eyes could be all at once opened to the number of whole families who wander hither and thither, homeless, shelterless, and abjectly destitute amidst the wilderness of London life. They steal like spectres in the shadow, along back streets and ways, silent in their misery, hopeless in their apathetic wretchedness. The dramatic contrasts in the world of London are startling indeed. The carriage of my lord rolls along Whitehall; just a few hundred yards away, on the Embankment, a whole homeless family is huddled together in the friendly darkness of a sheltered corner.

"LOOK AT NELLIE'S GENTLE LITTLE FACE."

"Of that spectral world, moving in such utter stupor of misery amidst us, and lurking in the shadows and generally living anywhere, Nellie has been an inhabitant. Look at her gentle little face; reflect that she is but eight years of age; think of what her life has been, and tell me if it is not meet that the very hills should sing aloud for joy over her deliverance! Think of the deadly miasma that rises like a foul exhalation from every lane and highway of the slumland in which this fair child has lived, and tell me how long she would have remained the gentle little Nellie that she is now! Hers was indeed destitution wholesale and unmitigated. A family consisting of father, mother, and five children —the youngest ten weeks and the eldest twelve years old—positively homeless in Great Babylon!

"Can any one imagine a more terrible fate? 'They slept,' says my agent who made the inquiry, 'in shelters, casual wards, and on the Thames Embankment.' I saw the whole family at Stepney, and their condition was then distressing in the extreme. It was the old, old story—the drunkenness of a father, the loss of his employment, the wrecking of the home, and finally the lapsing of both parents into that state of fatal lethargy and carelessness, which, like a lotos-curse, seems to seize upon all those who have lived long in this state of suffering. But, please God, that is all over with Nellie for ever.

"This Christmas time I have under my charge very nearly 5000 orphan and waif boys and girls of all ages, the largest family in the world, all rescued from positions and circumstances of whose diversity the cases I have quoted above will supply my readers with some faint notion."

The "Young Helpers' League," which has been established for just over a year in connection with "Dr. Barnardo's Homes," now includes 12,189 members or Companions. The League is designed for the aid specially of sick and crippled waifs, and the membership is open to young people under eighteen years of age of the middle and upper classes all over the world.

What's to be Done?

THIS question has been my thought day and night for weeks past. Homeless, starving, ragged, tempted Street Lads, with tearful eyes and clasped hands, have pleaded for food and shelter and a chance to lead an honest life. I have added bed after bed--have even had boys sleeping on the floor. I MUST NOT NOW CROWD IN ANY MORE. I have made temporary arrangements to sleep a few that I may not have to turn any away, but I beg all who love these boys, for His sake in whose sight "the redemption of their souls is precious," to come to my aid and help me to secure extra space and

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 1.—1 SAM. XXI.

This fatal lie of David was destined to fill his heart with bitter anguish, and to dye his hands in the blood of a family of priests. He would never have yielded to it had his soul been living aloft in that heroic faith which breathes through most of his Psalms. Tell the truth in reliance on the God of Truth, and you will have nothing to regret. The more transparent you are, the more peaceful your heart and restful your life.

There are two notable sayings here which we may well appropriate. The business of our king requires haste, and there is no sword to be compared with that of the Word of God, with which our David defeated the tempter in the wilderness. But when first spoken they were each coloured by the deceit of him who uttered them.

How rapid is the deterioration of God's saints when once they begin to tread the downward road! The nobler they are, the swifter and more headlong their descent. As David begins this chapter by lying, he ends it by feigning madness, which cannot be excused by alleging that that age invested it with the halo of sanctity. How had the fine gold become dim, when he who had been anointed by the Spirit of God scrabbled on the doors of the gates! And yet deep down his heart was filled with emotions that were to flower and fruit in one of his sweetest Psalms (the xxxiv.). As he went forth from that frightful peril, he tells us the story of his thoughts. He had sought the Lord and been heard. He had cried and been saved. He had suffered, but not one of his bones had been broken, and not one good thing had failed.

MONDAY, JANUARY 2.—1 SAMUEL XXII.

During the present age, Saul is on the throne, and the true David in hiding. But around him there is gathering in secret a host before which the kingdoms of this world will be ultimately subdued. His recruits are drawn from those who are in distress and debt, bitter of soul. But He sends none of them away. He sympathises with their sorrows, pays their debts, and turns their bitterness to sweetness; and out of them raises an army of mighty men, all of whom are welded to Him by indissoluble ties. What the world counts as its dregs and riff-raff, its ne'er-do-wells, Jesus transmutes into saints, and his saints are all heroes.

How sweetly David cared for his father and mother, and how tenderly God cared for him, but nothing could avert the terrible results of his misdoing. As he had sown, so was he to reap. There is nothing to alleviate the lurid horror of this scene, except those encouraging words with which David welcomed Abiathar, when as a fugitive he fled to him for protection. Are they not addressed by the Lord Jesus to all who escape to him? Abide with me, may be rendered abide in me. The binding the two lives into one bundle is so exactly the relationship between Him and us. Because He lives, we live also; indeed, He is our life. With Him there is safeguard for us here and hereafter.

In Psalm lii. David predicts the fate of Doeg, and contrasts it with his own happy portion. May we, amid the hatred of the ungodly, yet be as green olive trees in God's house, striking our roots deep down into his mercy.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 3.—1 SAMUEL XXIII.

A wanderer's life was this in very deed! Yet here, amid the rocks and caves of Judah, David wrote many of his most helpful Psalms. The whole Church is richer for these days of trial; and here is the clue to much that we cannot understand of the meaning of pain. We have to learn in suffering what we teach in song. But amid his wanderings how closely David walked with God! Before starting on his expeditions he carefully, and more than once, inquired of God, through the mysterious Urim and Thummin which Abiathar had brought with him. And when once a man gets into this blessed habit he may rely on God's deliverances. Where God is unable to help us is in paths of our own choosing. But it is impossible to walk with Him and fall into the hands of Saul. Saul may seek us every day, and false friends, as the Ziphites, play into his hands, but we may say, as David did at this time (Psa. liv.), that God is with them that uphold our souls, and that his name is good.

But amid all the outward strife God provides for us, as He did for David, some Jonathan, some rill of human love, some sweet friendship or brotherhood. Ah! this is the use of a friend, to strengthen our hands in God, to whisper words of hope, to enter into covenant with us. And this is what that best of Friends does, who discovers us in the deepest, thickest woods, and whispers his Fear not. There is no soul so lonely or desolate with whom Jesus will not enter into covenant and pour in the oil of his comfort and the wine of his love.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 4.—1 SAMUEL XXIV.

We may well stay to ponder the lesson of this chapter. The longer we study the Word of God the more convinced we are that there is scarcely an experience in our life to-day which does not have its counterpart in this marvellous mirror of human nature. Here we are taught that opportunity does not of itself indicate either God's will or our duty. Without doubt the kingdom was promised to David on the death of Saul. Even the king himself knew that. His life was a curse, not to himself only, but to his people. It would have been natural enough for David to have fallen in with the specious arguments of his followers. Here was his enemy within his power. He was eager to take David's life: would there not be ample justification, therefore, in taking his. Besides, God's promise so clearly indicated that ere long he must be removed by death. Against all these suggestions, which had in them the hiss of the serpent, David opposed the simple rule of rectitude, and of what was right in the sight of God. This stayed his hand. And there is evidence of the tenderness of his conscience in that his heart smote him for cutting off Saul's skirt. We must not argue that because there is opportunity the open door denotes the rightfulness of a questionable act. There is but one law for all true life—the will and rule of God. And if He is silent, no amount of favourable appearances can justify a violation of his law. With this at our back let us confront false friend and open foe.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5.—1 SAMUEL XXV.

In the heat of anger we are prone to do things that we have reason to repent of for many days afterwards. It is probable that as David reviewed this incident in his life after the lapse of years, he was increasingly thankful that he had been saved from bloodguiltiness in the case of Nabal. He had right on his side, according to the usage of the time. To-day the Arab tribe which guards the shepherd or a caravan, or restrains itself from plundering, expects some reward. And it was altogether unfair that this rich landowner should take all the advantage without making a return. And it was altogether too bad to cap his injustice with a coarse jest. At the same time, it would have been a blunder and a crime to wipe out the record of this discourtesy in blood. And so, as David acknowledged, God stepped in, in the person of Abigail, to arrest him. He recognised that God was in the interposition, and he blessed Him for it (32). What an illustration we have here of God's pre-eminent grace. The God of his mercy prevented him—i.e., came between him and the deed he meditated. May we be quick to see Him still averting us from our purpose and hiding pride from our hearts.

What delicate beauty there is in that companion of the soul as bound up in the bundle of the living, in contrast with the souls that are slung out, as from the hollow of a sling! So, in a sense that Abigail could not foresee, we are one with Jesus, bound up in his existence, one with Him in a union that death itself cannot dissolve.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 6.—1 SAMUEL XXVI.

This chapter is full of touching incidents and noble words. There was a sturdy heroism among the mighties of David's army. They loved feats of hardy courage, and therefore the heart of Abishai rose to David's challenge. Would that there were more of this spirit in us still, so to answer to the appeals of Jesus, as from his throne, He cries, "Who will go down with Me?"

Again, as in a previous chapter, Abishai, as the two stand inside the royal barricade, suggests that opportunity indicates duty. But David would not hear of it for a moment. He vowed that he would wait till God had taken his life, and he would not avail himself of any opportunity, however tempting, to anticipate or hasten a future which was inevitable, not because he could take it, but because God would give it. But that colloquy over the sleeper is a striking picture of how death stands threatening many a mortal, but the angel of life and mercy pleads for a little respite, in which there shall be time to repent.

How often do inconsistency and spiteful dealing threaten to drive men back from the inheritance of God. Oh, let us be careful lest by aught in us we are an obstacle to other souls. But how lovely it was that David was able to surmount all the evil things that Saul did or said with an unfailing charity.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7.—1 SAMUEL XXVII.

Times come to all of us, when we feel as if we cannot suffer a moment longer. We have come to the end of ourselves, that then is the test whether we will still cling to God for grace to live, though it be only a moment's store for a moment's need; or whether we will take a short cut, suggested by our own judgment, into comparative repose. David had had every assurance from God that he should be king, yet, all suddenly, he seems to have had a fainting fit, and, feeling that he would after all perish by the hand of Saul, he went off to Achish. In doing so, he involved himself in terrible difficulties and perplexities, as we shall presently see.

It is very wonderful to find what heights of holy rapture co-existed in David's heart with depths of deceit and two-facedness, and it is very humiliating. How much education this man after God's own heart needed!

When once we look away from the promise of God and look at circumstances, we turn from the straight path into devious tracks, which lead us into morasses and quagmires. If there should be any tempted thus that read these lines, let them dare to trust God, though every appearance be against them. He will vindicate Himself and our trust. The wicked may spread himself in great power, but the righteous should not fret himself in any wise to do evil, for evildoers shall be cut off, but the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

JANUARY 8.

REBUILDING THE TEMPLE. Ezra iii. 1—13.
GOLDEN TEXT, VERSE 11.

THE journey from Babylon to Jerusalem would require not less than four months, as it did in Ezra's day (vii. 9). The seventh month (1)—the latter part of our September—was that in which the Day of Atonement and the Feast of Tabernacles were to be kept (Lev. xxiii. 27—36), the first on the tenth day, and the second beginning on the fifteenth day and lasting for seven days. The returned exiles reached Jerusalem before the seventh month, and were occupied in rearing for themselves some habitations amid the ruins of the city and its neighbourhood.

The chapter tells of two things—the setting up of the altar and the laying of the foundation of the Temple. Around these two incidents our lessons must gather.

1—7. The two leaders of the people were Joshua, the high priest, and Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah. These men were to the restoration what Luther and Melancthon were to the Protestant Reformation. When the time comes for a great work to be done, God raises up suitable men to do it. The people were as one man (1), for the best of leaders can do nothing with a divided people. Unity not only increases the strength of the few, but is the condition upon which God's Spirit is given (see Acts ii. 1—4). In building the altar first of all, they gave to God the first place. Abraham acted upon this principle (Gen. xii. 7, 8). God attends to the interests of those who seek to honour Him (Matt. vi. 33).

Note the reason given for setting up the altar. (3) If the fear of other people is upon them, must they not arm themselves for defence? God is their best defence. "Have we enemies? Then it is good to have God for our friend." Apprehension of danger should lead us to God. Strongest enemies are impotent against those who call upon the Lord (Psa. lvi. 9).

When the altar was set up it was well used. They began at once (6), and offered daily, according to all the set feasts of the Lord (5). "Let not those that have an altar starve it." Yet their offerings, though abundant, were according to the word of Moses, the man of God (2). "You are very precise," someone remarked to one of the Puritans. "I serve a precise God," was the reply. There is no value in service which is performed in neglect of the Divine word. Their rule was a good one, as the duty of every day required (4), or, as in margin, "the matter of the day in his day." Rest in service depends upon our doing each day the whole duty of the day, and no more. The arrears of yesterday's neglect, and the anticipated duties of to-morrow, create worry. Beside their offerings upon God's altar they gave also of their substance for the rebuilding of the Temple (7). An altar without a temple would do when there had been no opportunity to build, but when the opportunity is given it would be guilty neglect not to rise and build.

8—13. The building of the temple began in the month Zif, corresponding to our April and May. This was only seven months after the altar was set up. Considering the state of ruin in which they must have found the city and the temple site, it is evident that they had lost no time. The foundation was laid amid great demonstrations of sacred joy (10). The refrain quoted (11) is from Psa. cxviii.; and "it has been concluded that this sacred song was sung upon that occasion."

The grief of some mingled with the joy of others (12, 13). To some, who had been born in captivity, and who had never seen the former temple, this was naturally an occasion of great rejoicing. But others were old men, who had beheld the glory of Solomon's temple. They grieved more for the loss of that than they rejoiced over the beginnings of this. The prophet Haggai refers to such as these, and gives the assurance that if the new temple should be inferior in magnificence to that of Solomon it would have a greater glory by the coming of the Messiah (Hag. ii.).

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. W. St. Clair Tisdall, who is proceeding to Julfa, has reached Bushire safely.

Rev. Tilden Smith, formerly curate in the parish, has been appointed vicar of Holy Innocent's, Hornsey.

The townspeople of Leeds have decided to raise a memorial to the late Canon Edward Jackson.

Rev. W. Bird Hornby was on Wednesday week consecrated at St. Paul's Cathedral as Bishop of Nyassaland.

The Bishop of Manchester has appointed Rev. Frank E. Hopwood, rector of Bury, to the honorary canonry vacant by the death of Canon Pitcairn.

Rev. Dr. Gritton, who for twenty-five years has been associated with the Lord's Day Rest Association, and who for more than forty years has been a clergyman, has been immersed by Dr. James A. Spurgeon at West Croydon Baptist Church.

Rev. Hubert Tugwell, of Lagos, reports that Miss Warner has had an attack of fever. The bishop-designate of the Niger and Mrs. Hill were quite well, and their presence and counsel had greatly cheered and encouraged the workers on the West Coast.

Rev. W. Roberts, formerly the pastor of Junction-road Congregational Church, Upper Holloway, and more recently of Salisbury Congregational Church, has entered the Church of England, and has been ordained by the Bishop of Rochester in Rochester Cathedral.

The Cathedral clergy of Winchester have just undertaken the support of one of the evangelists of the Church Army at Eastleigh, where a large colony of railway persons has recently been created. This has been done chiefly at the instigation of the Dean of Winchester.

The usual monthly meeting of the C.M.S. Younger Clergy Union was held on Monday week last at Salisbury-square. Mr. J. Monro, C.B., late Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police and now honorary missionary in the Nuddea district, Bengal, gave an address on "The Missionary Outlook in Lower Bengal."

The committee of the C.M.S. have put forth another special appeal for men to take up work on the borders of the Niger Soudan. The committee countenance the principles of work originally laid down by Mr. J. A. Robinson and Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke, and admit the possibility of local autonomy to a considerable degree.

Rev. John Geale Unwins, M.A., vicar of St. Matthew's, Cainscross, near Stroud, for over fifty years, died on Sunday week in his eightieth year. His record of half a century (says the Birmingham Post) was only excelled in the district by Rev. John Elliott, vicar of the neighbouring parish of Randwick, who held the vicarage for seventy years, and died in his hundredth year.

Considerable activity has been displayed at the Martyrs' Memorial Hall, Dartford, during the past three months. Amongst those who have given lectures or Gospel addresses have been General Sir Robert Phayre, Sir Arthur Blackwood, Rev. W. T. McCormick, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Mr. T. Lawrence Mitchell. The whole of the work is carried on by members of the Dartford Young Men's Bible Class.

The Dean of Norwich believes, above all things, in making his cathedral a real centre of usefulness. In addition to the instruction that he gives personally, he has arranged a course of six monthly lectures, extending from December to April, on "Church History," by Archdeacon Farrar, Rev. J. A. Robinson, the Bishop of Ripon, Prebendary Meyrick, Prebendary Leathes, and the Vice-Principal of Ridley Hall.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new mission has been opened in Eldon-street, Manchester.

Rev. James Chadburn has resigned the charge of the church at Sutton, Surrey.

A new mission-hall has been erected at Dutchworth Green, to seat 140 persons.

Rev. A. J. Andrews has accepted the pastorate of Saltley-road Church, Birmingham.

Rev. A. Lee is resigning the pastorate of Grove Chapel, Gomersal, where he has ministered for ten years.

Castle-gate Sunday-school, Nottingham, reports a total, including branches, of 111 teachers and 1350 scholars.

Mr. Arthur Moore, of Nottingham Institute, has accepted the co-pastorate of Colwick-street Church, Nottingham.

Harrow-road Church reports 600 scholars in the Sunday-schools and a good work among young people in houses of business.

A new hall, erected at a cost of £1200, has been opened at North Hill in connection with the Congregational Church, Highgate.

Rev. John Jameson, lately of the Wesleyan East End Mission, has now entered on the pastoral charge at Arundel-square, Barnsbury.

The twenty-first anniversary of the New Court Chapel (Tollington Park) proved interesting and enthusiastic; evidence being forthcoming of remarkably good work.

Rev. Llewellyn H. Parsons, of Bristol, has accepted the pastorate of Finsbury-park Church, and expects to commence his ministry on the first Sunday in February, until which time Dr. Newman Hall will remain in charge.

The congregation of New College Chapel, South Hampstead, has resolved to adopt the unanimous recommendation of the committee, and to make all the seats in the chapel free and unappropriated from the beginning of the New Year.

The 247th anniversary of Nonconformity in the city of Canterbury was celebrated on Thursday by a meeting at Guildhall-street Church (Rev. G. Stephenson). It was stated that the church was formed in 1645 with nine members, the year closing with twenty-three members.

We are informed that attractive Sunday evening services are to be held for three months in the Victoria Theatre, Waterloo-road, which has been secured by the London Congregational Board. The first two services will be conducted respectively by Rev. J. Guinness Rogers and Rev. Bernard J. Snell. Other ministers have promised their help, among whom are Revs. J. P. Gledstone and J. C. Postans, and it is expected that most of those in South London will take a prominent part in the scheme. To render the services doubly popular, arrangements are being made in the same district for the organisation of an orchestra and choir. The main purpose of the effort is the reaching of the non-church going people who Sunday after Sunday throng the streets in the neighbourhood. The first service is to be held January 8, and will commence at 8 p.m.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. D. T. Humphreys has accepted a call to Ashby-de-la-Zouche.

Rev. J. F. Porteous has been holding evangelistic services in Epsworth.

Rev. C. B. Sawday has been holding special services in Barrow-on-Soar.

The anniversary of the Wood-street Church, Bilston, has proved very encouraging.

Rev. E. H. Howard, of the Pastor's College, has accepted an unanimous call to the pastorate of West Green Baptist Church.

Rev. D. H. Moore has been ordained pastor at Barking. Professor Gracey gave the charge to the pastor, and Dr. Pierson addressed the church.

On Sunday, November 20, the first Baptist Church on the Diamond Fields in South Africa was opened. The church is the finest building in the town of Kimberley.

Owing to failing health Rev. D. Lewis resigned the pastorate at Noddfa he has held happily fifteen years. He has however been persuaded to withdraw his resignation.

At last committee meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, Rev. R. Wright Hay, of Dacca, and Rev. J. Whitehead, of the Congo, were welcomed home on furlough by the treasurer. Farewells were given to Rev. G. R. Pople and Dr. and Mrs. Webb, who sail for Africa at the beginning of the New Year.

The Baptists of New York are putting their city mission work on a firmer basis than it has ever occupied. With an executive board of thirty, Rev. M. R. Deming, as corresponding secretary and superintendent, New York Baptists should, the Baptist newspapers in the States think, be able to lift speedily from the denomination the reproach that, year by year, they have declined in relative influence and numbers.

It is announced that one of the oldest Baptist ministers Rev. J. Litchfield, of Kingsthorpe, near Northampton, has passed away. Rather more than a year ago he resigned the pastorate, which he had held for forty-three years. He was well known throughout the county, and was everywhere held in high esteem as a preacher of no ordinary ability, and as a man of sound judgment and fine spirit. His services in connection with the Association, County Mission, and Provident Society were of great value to the churches.

In the hand-book of the Baptist Union for the coming year the number of those baptized within the past year is given. In England and Wales 15,004 persons have been immersed, and 8082 in the remaining countries of Europe. Asia reports 12,000 baptisms, Africa 2839, Australia 1330, the West Indies 3115, South America 90, and North America 175,991, making a total of 218,450. The registered Baptist membership throughout the world, so far as ascertained, is close on 4,000,000.

The thirtieth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. J. H. Barnard at Southwood-lane Chapel, Highgate, has been celebrated. Mr. Barnard mentioned that in 1860 he was in business in London, but he lost his eyesight, and that calamity was the means of his entering the ministry. For the first twelvemonth after coming to Highgate he was obliged to commit to memory every passage of Scripture given in the services, but he afterwards recovered his sight. During his pastorate 430 members had been received into church fellowship, and 486 young women had passed through his wife's Bible-class.

METHODIST.

After Mr. Waugh's mission in Spalding in January last a men's Bible-class was formed, which has proved remarkably successful.

Rev. W. B. Lowther, superintendent of Thirsk Circuit, has just undergone a dangerous operation. Happily he is progressing well.

Rev. W. Allen has paid a successful visit to Hull, when special meetings were held for the men of the guardship Audacious, lying in the Humber.

Last week a series of meetings in connection with the Primitive Methodist Sunderland and Newcastle District took place at South Shields, in aid of the £50,000 thanksgiving jubilee fund.

In order to reach and win the "corner boys," who in Manchester, as elsewhere, are a menace to society, the workers at Bedford-street, Salford, have a thoroughgoing lads' club, with 320 members.

The weekly prayer meeting in the Wesleyan Mission House will not be held on the next two Fridays, but will be resumed on Friday, January 13, and will thereafter commence at 12.30 instead of 12.

The work in Wesley Chapel, Leeds, under Rev. S. Chadwick, is going on more successfully than ever. The place is not only filled on Sunday nights, but scores are turned away from the entrances, after every inch of room has been occupied.

On Wednesday week at the Wesleyan Mission Committee, Rev. F. W. Macdonald gave interesting particulars relative to his recent official visit to Austria, and spoke hopefully of the position of his Wesleyan brethren in Vienna. He had had an interview with the Chief Secretary of the Department of Public Worship.

Rev. Evans Rowe, chairman of the Natal Wesleyan Conference, reports that the success of the native missions in that colony has scarcely ever been equalled in any part of the world, and even exceeded the success in the Apostolic times. The natives are clamouring for missionaries, and he does not know any division of the country where he could not place fifty more missionary teachers.

Many of the Bradford churches are putting forth special efforts to provide help. Notably among these may be mentioned Westgate Methodist Free Church, which is providing a series of free dinners to the poor, and White Abbey Wesleyan, which is undoubtedly making itself felt in the district, and, as it contains many of the poorest of the borough, it is a serious problem how to deal with the distress.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., speaking at Louth on the influence of Wesley on England, said that they had to hold aloft the standard of pure Protestantism. They must protest against the introduction of mediæval mass into the churches, and have nothing to do with confession either in the church, the family, or the press. They must also fight against agnosticism and humanitarianism, and protest against the introduction of Ritualism and Romanism into the Protestant Churches of the land.

We hear that as a practical step towards the reduction of the needless Methodist chapels in villages, Rev. Richard Chew, of the United Methodist Free Church, has just carried a resolution through the Connexional Committee that the Louth circuit, where a movement is in progress for placing all the chapels on the Connexional deed, should be asked to open negotiations with the other Methodist churches with a view to reduce the competition between them in places where there are several Methodist chapels. In this way, it is urged, an unseemly rivalry will be avoided and money and energies will be economised for the opening up of new places at present untouched by Methodist agency.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. William Martin has resigned his charge at Forest Hill.

The congregation at Aldershot is about to build a new mission church at Heathend.

Mr. Thomas Mackay, M.A., has been appointed to be assistant and missionary at Regent-square.

Rev. John Conway has entered, under promising auspices, on his new charge at Arthur's Hill, Newcastle.

The self-denial contributions from 120 congregations exceeds £1000. In all 290 congregations participated in the effort.

At the induction of Rev. J. G. Train to his new charge at Upper Norwood, Rev. A. N. Mackray gave an interesting address, and Rev. A. Macphail preached.

A conference of East London ministers and elders was held on Friday evening, in Bow-road Church, to consider the present distress and methods to be adopted.

On Monday week a serious explosion occurred at the English Presbyterian Church, Mold. A church meeting was about to be held in one of the class-rooms, when, on the gas being lit, a violent explosion took place. The building itself suffered slight harm, but one or two members were somewhat severely burnt.

A joint meeting of the three congregations of New Barnet, Wood Green, and Crouch Hill, was held at Crouch Hill Church on the last day of self-denial week. The meeting was largely attended, and was addressed by Mr. John Knox Bokwe, of Lovedale, Rev. O. Michelsen, of Tongoa, Miss Mann, Dr. Dykes, and Rev. J. B. Meharry.

A large and influential committee has been appointed to consider the circumstances and needs of the weaker Presbyterian congregations in the working-class districts of London, and to report as to the best way of helping them. The ordinary assistance of the Sustentation and Home Mission Funds has failed to give the help required.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A. Priscilla Fowler, of London, has arrived safely at Seoni Malwa, Central India, to join Friends' Missionary Staff there. Her welcome among the workers has been warm, and her presence very cheering.

After a visit of about two years in Australasia among the churches and families of Friends there, Alfred Wright has returned home. Calling on his way at Brumana, Lebanon, his services have everywhere been greatly appreciated.

Most hopeful accounts come from Syria. There are now five meetings held on the Sabbath, in connection with Brumana Mission, and the need of more anointed workers is felt, as the work grows steadily, notwithstanding priestly opposition.

The devoted evangelist, David Sampson, and his wife, from North Carolina, have just arrived in England. They have been liberated for service in Dublin and London yearly meetings. They propose first going to Birmingham, where they have relatives.

M. A. Marriage Allen, whose indefatigable and successful labours in Hoxton are so well known, has landed in New York, and intends to spend the winter among the coloured population of the Southern States. Her work in the past among the negro churches has been much blessed.

The religious census at Birmingham has revealed the fact that on November 27 nearly 10,000 attendances were made at Friends' meeting-houses and mission halls, and that, therefore, they are taking rank among the larger Churches of the city. The adult-school movement is largely to be credited with this cheering result of years of earnest labour.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Sandleach, Mrs. Boston, a faithful follower of Jesus.—At Harrogate, Rev. W. Holdsworth, for many years a useful Wesleyan minister.—In Rosebery-street, Liverpool, very suddenly, Mrs. Joseph Hodges, a quiet but useful worker.—At Leominster, on 16th inst., Mr. A. Norman, aged fifty-nine, who for forty-two years had been a useful preacher.—At Southfield, Taunton, Mrs. James Stevens, jun., a valued worker.—At Sydney, N.S.W., Mr. William Smith, a valued Y.M.C.A. worker.—On 14th inst., Mrs. Thorne, wife of Henry Thorne, after many years of suffering.—At Gosport, aged 71, Mrs. H. W. Abraham, beloved for her work's sake.—At Burton-on-Trent, on 18th inst., Mrs. Bassett, aged sixty-nine, a devoted servant of Christ.—At North Deighton, Mr. W. Atkinson, aged sixty-seven.—At Clapham, Mrs. H. Somerford, aged seventy-three, a helper of many.—At St. Mary's, Windermere, on 18th inst., Rev. H. Ainslie, aged seventy, a beloved vicar.—At Eccles, Canon Pitcairn, aged eighty-one, an active and honoured clergyman.—At Crostwick Rectory, Norwich, Mrs. Dickson, wife of the rector, and greatly beloved for her devotion and sympathy.—At Clonoulty, Rev. Thos. A. Drought, for many years rector of the parish, aged seventy-nine, and greatly esteemed by those who knew him.

Notices.

Correction.—In first line of last stanza of Christmas poem in last week's issue, by Mr. Charles Ellis, for "Over your head," read "Over you bend."

We are informed that the hymn recently mentioned in this column, "Time is earnest, passing by," was by Dyer, not Watts, as stated by a correspondent.

'THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION,' BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, & CATARRH.

By E. W. Alabone, M.D. Pa., U.S.A., F.R.M.S., late M.R.C.S. Eng., late Consulting Surgeon to the Lower Clapton Orphan Asylum, &c., Lynton House, Highbury Quadrant, London, N.

By the success of this treatment all barriers have been broken down, and it is now an acknowledged fact that CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, and ASTHMA are curable through this discovery, many thousands of cases abandoned as hopeless having been successfully treated.

Dr. CRONIN, M.D., L.S.A., writes:—"You have done wonders for my patient. I hardly thought he could have improved so much under the treatment."

Dr. FAIRBAIRN, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"The success of your treatment of Consumption is simply marvellous. I have had no less than Sixty Cases of Cure."

"Your remedy for Consumption has proved a success in my own case, after having been given up by several eminent physicians."—T. YOUNG, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S., &c., &c.

DR. WATSON DAVIES, M.D., L.R.C.S., writes:—"I have great pleasure in stating that a near relative of mine, who was in an ADVANCED STAGE OF CONSUMPTION when I commenced your treatment (several members of her family having died of that disease), is now wonderfully improved in all respects, and has entirely lost her cough."

Dr. C. (M.R.C.S. Eng., L.R.C.P. Lond.) writes—"I was invalided in 1882 as unfit for further service, owing to consumption. I placed myself under Dr. Alabone's treatment, and have been able to pursue the practice of my profession, having been actively at work for six months and in good health."

Dr. CAMPBELL, L.R.C.P. Edin., L.R.C.S. Edin., writes:—"My wife has very greatly improved since she commenced your treatment."
